

News
Doctors do not like you asking about vaccines
Page 2

Solutions
Shining a light on relationship in a new economy
Page 4

Politics
Revealing who rules Britannia: It's not the PM
Page 7

International
Israel siege edges survivors in Gaza toward starvation
Page 17

The Uncensored Truth

TheLIGHT

ISSUE 75 Monthly

FREE FOR THINKERS

www.thelightpaper.co.uk

Counting the cost of change

Local government reorganisation paused not axed Page 3

Injected with a poison

Research reveals toxic metals found in covid jabs

by STEFAN BECKER

NO official analyses of the ingredients of the covid shots have been made anywhere in the world to date.

As pharmaceuticals of any kind are very strictly regulated and monitored by official institutions, the content and composition of these injections should have become known very soon after the vaccine rollout.

But this has not happened, because if the public knew what exactly is in the vaccines, they would become very concerned. To prevent this, the actual ingredients have never been disclosed.

A group of scientists in Argentina performed a sophisticated chemical analysis of AstraZeneca, CanSino, Moderna, Biontech/Pfizer, and Sputnik V vaccines, using advanced, precise, mass-spectrometry methods (ICP-MS). The study found 57 undeclared and often, severely, toxic substances, including titanium, gold, mercury, lead and uranium.

This would normally not be possible, as the guidelines ensure that each batch produced will only receive clearing for use when it contains exactly the specified ingredients of the formula initially authorised by the respective authorities.

It's no wonder that so many side effects have been observed in people who got these injections. There are numerous highly toxic and dangerous elements including many heavy metals contained in the preparations that should never be injected into a human body.

57 undeclared substances have been found across manufacturer's covid-19 'vaccines'

On the other hand, it can safely be assumed that none of these elements ended up in the vaccines by accident. They are there for a reason.

When considering what is actually in the vaccines compared to what is officially claimed to be in the vaccines, it becomes apparent that these injections were never meant to protect against infections of respiratory diseases.

It should be of great concern that within the tested samples, 12 of the 15 lanthanides of the periodic table (uranium, neodymium, etc.) were found. These elements have magnetic and luminescent properties, and their safety for use in the human body has never been demonstrated. They are considered highly cytotoxic (can cause damage or death to living cells).

The Argentinian researchers came to the conclusion that the mRNA vaccines were being used as a worldwide nanotechnological experiment; at least, it could be proven that most of the elements needed for self-assembling nanotechnology could be isolated in the vaccine samples.

Another surprising find was that the content of the vaccine vials changed over time. The researchers tested the sample vaccines multiple times during their study. Despite ensuring well-mixed homogenous solutions when drawing for testing, the chemical elements that were found in the samples changed with each new analysis.

The researchers assumed that this was due to the assembling processes that occurred before the next analysis happened.

In the report, it states: 'in addition to the analysis of the composition, researchers from different parts of the world have been carrying out studies on samples of covid-19 vaccines and observing the phenomenon of self-assembly of nano and microparticles of orthogonal morphology (Delgado, 2022; Nixon, 2023; Lee and Broudy, 2024a; Zelada, 2024).'

While mainstream news and politics still maintain the narrative of a severe pandemic during 2020-2021, the chemical analysis of the so-called covid vaccines reveals that they were not intended to protect their recipients from a respiratory infection.

Did the alleged pandemic provide the excuse to inject much of humanity with toxic metals and an unknown technology?

Propaganda and outright lies keep the public from connecting the sudden and unexplained illnesses and deaths that they are seeing in their own lives and in the world with the largest medical experiment in history. The media repeatedly tell them the causes are anything but the toxic injections that billions were coerced into taking at least two of, and some many more.

- stefanawakening.substack.com
  https://tinyurl.com/a5y6db6c
- rumble.com
  https://tinyurl.com/33xe792r

Spiky about informed consent

Doctors do not like you asking about vaccines

by ZANE SAMPSON

A PARENT will stand in the baby food aisle for ten minutes reading a label.

She will compare two jars of pureéd carrots like the fate of civilisation depends on it, checking for added sugar, checking for preservatives, photographing the ingredient list to send to a friend.

I know this because I watched it happen for years. I spent a decade in natural health retail, two of those years running a Natural Grocers store, and the label readers were my people. Careful, thorough, unwilling to put anything in their child's body without knowing exactly what it was.

Then the subject of vaccination came up, and those same parents went quiet. Not because they stopped caring; because they had learned that asking the same careful questions in that setting got them treated like a problem instead of a parent.

That silence is the story. And it tells you everything about what has happened to informed consent.

Not up for discussion. Photo: pd

Informed consent is not a slogan; it is a standard, and a demanding one. Medical ethics built it on three pillars.

First, full disclosure: the person deciding, or the parent deciding for a child, must be told the risks, the benefits, and the alternatives, in language they can actually understand.

Second, comprehension: they must genuinely grasp what they were told, which means time, plain speech, and room to ask follow-up questions.

Third, voluntariness: the decision must be theirs, free of coercion, pressure or punishment for choosing differently. Miss any one of the three and you do not have consent. You have compliance dressed up in the language of consent.

Genuine informed consent stands on three pillars – remove one and it is not consent.

Now hold vaccination up against that standard and watch how quickly the standard gets renegotiated.

Disclosure becomes a one-page handout and a reassuring phrase. The questions a parent is told are reasonable in every other aisle of their life become unreasonable the moment they are asked in a clinic: what is in it? What are the known risks? What are the alternatives? What happens if we wait? These are the exact questions which informed consent exists to protect, and they are the questions most likely to get a parent labelled difficult, or worse.

The questions that informed consent exists to protect are the ones parents are punished for asking.

Comprehension gets replaced by speed. The modern well-child visit runs on a timetable measured in minutes, and there is no room in it for a real conversation about risk. A parent who wants to understand is told there is nothing to understand, that the matter is settled, that asking is itself a symptom of misinformation. That is not comprehension; it is the appearance of agreement extracted from exhaustion.

And voluntariness, the third pillar, is where the whole structure collapses in plain sight. School mandates, daycare requirements, workplace pressure; a choice made under threat of exclusion is not a choice. You cannot coerce someone into a medical decision and then call the result consent. The word means something or it means nothing.

I want to be clear about what I am and what I am not: I am not a doctor, and I have never wanted to be one. I am not part of that system and I do not speak its language on its terms. What I am is a father of two young sons, and a man who spent ten years listening to parents who were afraid to ask their pediatrician the questions they asked me across a store counter.

They were not reckless people; they were the label readers. They had done the reading on everything else in their child's life, and they could not understand why this one subject was fenced off from the scrutiny they applied to all the rest.

Here is what I think that fence is really protecting: it is not protecting children; they are protected by careful parents making careful decisions with full information, which is exactly what informed consent was designed to produce.

The fence is protecting a system that cannot survive the questions. A practice that is confident in its evidence welcomes scrutiny; it answers the questions and trusts parents to reason. A practice that shuts down the questions, punishes the questioners, and redefines dissent as danger is telling you something about itself, and you should listen.

The double standard is the tell. Nobody tells the label reader in the baby food aisle that she is endangering her child by reading. Nobody calls a father anti-food for asking what is in the jar. We celebrate that vigilance everywhere except the one place where the stakes are highest and the decision is hardest to reverse.

Ask yourself why. The answer is not that vaccines are too important to question, it is that questions are too dangerous to the people who need you not to ask them.

So what does the parent do? The same thing the label reader does: slow down.

Ask the questions anyway. Demand the three pillars: full disclosure, real comprehension, a decision free of coercion. If the answers are good, they will survive the asking. If the asking is treated as the problem, you have learned something far more valuable than any handout.

- Zane Sampson writes about health freedom, natural health, and government overreach to 43,500 followers on Facebook and readers of his Substack. He spent more than ten years in natural health, including two years as store manager of a Natural Grocers store. He is the author of* Sold On Fear.
- https://www.zanesampson.com

TheLIGHT

Nov-Dec 2026 The Uncensored Truth

Distributed independently to remain fiercely free of the establishment we seek to hold to account.

Original content is Creative Commons, 2026. thelightpaper.co.uk

For all subscription issues, please contact:
subscriptions@thelightpaper.co.uk

For all distribution queries and pre-orders, please email: lightdistribution@mailbox.org

For advertising enquiries, please contact:
ads@thelightpaper.co.uk

Editor: Darren Smith Sub-editor: Harry Wundas
Layout: mi.ki Distribution: Fifi Rose & Matt Smith
Advertising: Nicola Kelly Subscriptions: Ross & Rebecca Pename
Proofreading: Tracy S, Shane F, Alan I, Stevie M

Special thanks to every one of our distributors and hubs who volunteer every month to bring you the uncensored news.

To keep our paper FREE is not free – you can help by ordering advance copies, donating or subscribing at:

https://thelightpaper.co.uk

"Covid was the manifestation of evil, destroying normality as we know it. Luckily it also awakened millions."
Ageing Escape Artist

Counting the cost of change

U-turns and lack of transparency in political farce

by THOM ASTER

ON September 7, ministers ordered councils across much of England to stop implementing one of the largest restructurings of local government in generations.

Decisions affecting Essex, Hampshire, Norfolk and Suffolk were withdrawn, 14 more areas were placed under review, and councils involved in July's decisions were told to cease implementation work.

In the official letter, local-government minister Jim McMahon said the halt would reduce the risk of 'nugatory work' if the government changed course. In other words, ministers recognised a risk that effort and money already committed might be wasted. What they have not yet produced is a comprehensive public account of that cost.

The issue is not whether every council boundary should remain untouched. Local government can be expensive, fragmented and frustrating, and there are reasonable arguments for merging services.

The issue is accountability when the government encourages authorities to spend time and money planning radical change, then changes direction after receiving fresh legal advice. Which contracts are still active? How much was paid to consultants? What does cancellation cost? Who pays for the preparation that led nowhere?

On September 8, McMahon told Parliament the Government had provided £7.6m to support development of proposals across twenty-one reorganisation areas and had committed a £63m transition-funding programme.

On September 30, a Lords answer specified that £1.8m had actually been paid to Surrey in August from that transition commitment. It is important not to call all £63m money already spent, nor add Surrey's payment to the allocation as if it were separate funding.

But when Liberal Democrat Tom Morrison asked what local authorities in the four withdrawn areas had already spent, the September 14 answer contained no total.

Conservative James Cartlidge asked what had been spent nationally and in Suffolk. His answer also omitted the figures requested. Ministers acknowledged local resources had been committed and promised to consider costs during the review. An acknowledgement is not an audit.

Unelected Prime Minister, Andy Burnham

Kent's own documents put a scale on the undertaking. A March 2026 finance report estimated transitional implementation costs of between £99.4m and £139.1m over five years, depending on which reorganisation model was selected, including £11.9m in projected pre-vesting costs. These are forecasts, not sums already lost.

Actual historical outlays are recorded elsewhere. In a May 21 council answer, Kent disclosed £194,859.50 plus VAT spent on strategic-partner and legal work associated with its November 2025 business case, paid from a central-government grant. Another £123,700 plus VAT had been spent from its General Fund on earlier strategic-partner work and modelling. That is £318,559.50 before VAT across the two named categories, not including a valuation of staff time already within council budgets.

On June 9, Kent authorised procurement of another strategic partner for the proposed transition of fourteen councils, anticipating a contract worth more than £1 million.

That was authorisation to procure, not proof that the anticipated amount was eventually contracted or paid. With the programme halted, the obvious public-interest question is whether the procurement produced an enforceable commitment and, if so, what it now costs to stop.

On October 12, Kent County Council announced it was proceeding with a legal challenge to ministers' July decision to replace Kent and Medway's existing councils with four new unitary authorities. Council leader Linden Kemkaran says repeated demands for an explanation of the preferred model have not received satisfactory answers.

The wider pause did not withdraw the original Kent decision, and the council says the matter is now with the government's legal department and the court. That is evidence of a live legal dispute, not a court ruling that ministers broke the law.

In Essex, the county council says it pursued a judicial-review challenge before the government withdrew the area's decision. In the same county, Rochford District Council estimates it spent around £100,000 preparing for the process, not counting staff time. Multiply nothing from that single example: we have no reliable basis for extrapolating Rochford's cost across the country. The point is that each council has its own bills, even when a ministerial announcement makes the original plan disappear.

The issue is accountability when the government encourages authorities to spend time and money planning radical change then changes direction

An October 6 open letter from the National Residents for Civic Accountability, supplied with a schedule of evidence, accuses ministers and councils of misleading people about whether reorganisation was compulsory, of inadequate scrutiny of spending and of permitting planning decisions to outrun their evidential foundations.

The allegations warrant examination, but the documents are not judicial findings. Crucially, a government process summary identifies powers already contained in the Local Government and Public Involvement in Health Act 2007, and Kent's May answer expressly invokes the 2007 framework, the Localism Act 2011 and the Best Value duty as authority for its preparatory work.

Whether particular decisions lawfully used those powers remains open to challenge; it is not accurate to say no powers were identified.

The residents also question housing targets using falling birth rates and school-age population. Yet official September 2026 guidance bases the standard housing-need formula on a proportion of existing housing stock adjusted for affordability. That formula is open to criticism, especially where local plans threaten valued land, but birth rates alone cannot prove the targets unlawful or unnecessary.

Genuine accountability depends on arguments that can survive examination, not arguments that merely sound powerful.

There may be long-term savings from a well-designed reform. The government cites reported efficiencies in North Yorkshire as evidence of that possibility. But potential savings are no substitute for publishing current liabilities. The public should see an authority-by-authority schedule of consultancy costs, staff resources, awards and contracts, cancellation charges and grant money spent, separately identifying actual payments from future forecasts. It should also see the reasons for selecting the disputed council maps and the timetable for completing the review.

Four decisions withdrawn. Fourteen areas ordered to stop. Kent now challenging the government in court. Individual councils confirming costs, and MPs asking for a total they have not been given.

If Burnham's government is capable of remapping local democracy, it should be capable of accounting for the money committed in the attempt. Until that happens, one question should follow every ministerial explanation: where is the full bill?

- thomaster.substack.com
- www.gov.uk
  Local government reorganisation: programme review and decisions withdrawal letter to council leaders https://tinyurl.com/beurjzze
- questions-statements.parliament.uk
  Local Government: Reorganisation; Question for Ministry of Housing, Communities and Local Government
  https://tinyurl.com/5ny8eaju
- news.kent.gov.uk
  KCC steps up fight for answers over Government's Kent reorganisation decision https://tinyurl.com/3brvuwwb

Shining a light on new economy

by MARTINA WILLIS

Relationships that enhance independence key to unlocking healthy future

The lighthouse makes the relationship between a ship and the shore visible. Photo: Keith Luke ARTHUR had become very good at spotting systems that took more from people than they gave back.

He saw it when the bank closed its local branch and then invited customers to enjoy a more personal relationship with an app.

He saw it when the supermarket replaced six women at the tills with six machines and one exhausted woman who had to supervise them. He saw it whenever an institution removed people's choices and called the result convenience.

Over the years, Arthur worked hard to recover some independence.

He used cash whenever he could. He bought eggs from Ellen down the road and vegetables from the family beyond the old mill. He repaired things, stored seeds and kept enough candles to get through a power cut.

He also distributed a small independent newspaper around the village. Every month, several boxes arrived at his house. Arthur left copies in cafes, pushed them through letterboxes and handed them to anyone who looked as though they might still enjoy an unsupervised thought.

Slowly, the village began to change. People asked more questions, bought more food locally and learned practical skills. They also wondered why so many ordinary parts of life now required an account, a password and permission from an office miles away.

Arthur was pleased with this until people began asking him a more difficult question: "What should we build instead?"

"Something local and independent," Arthur would say, to general agreement.

"And how would it work?" At this point, Arthur usually remembered something urgent he needed to do elsewhere.

He had seen too many movements begin with freedom and end with a committee. The committee created rules, the rules required administration, and before long the people who had escaped one system were queuing for permission from another.

Arthur wanted no part of that, so the villagers remained independent.

Very independent.

Ellen had more eggs than she could sell, while the café bought eggs from a national supplier because nobody had arranged a regular delivery.

The old mechanic owned almost every tool ever made but rarely used them because he cared for his wife alone.

A young mother wanted to grow vegetables but had no garden. Three streets away, an elderly woman had a large garden and 40 years of knowledge but her knees were no longer interested in the work.

The baker threw away unsold bread while two local families quietly struggled.

Everyone had something. Everyone needed something. Yet most people carried their needs alone because independence had gradually come to mean managing without one another.

One evening, Arthur walked to the coast. At the edge of the cliffs stood an old lighthouse. Its beam moved across the water in the same steady circle it had followed for years.

The keeper was outside repairing a gate. "Does that light tell the ships where to go?" Arthur asked.

"No," said the keeper.

"Does it organise them?"

"No," came the response.

"Do the captains have to register?" The keeper lowered his screwdriver. "They are ships, Arthur."

They watched the beam cross the sea.

"What does the lighthouse actually do, then?" Arthur asked.

"It makes the relationship visible," said the keeper. "The ship can see where it is in relation to the coast and the rocks."

"The captain still chooses the course?"

"Of course. A lighthouse offers orientation. It does not take over the wheel."

Arthur stood there for a while.

Until then, he had seen only two choices. People either carried everything alone or created a system that would eventually acquire power over them.

The lighthouse suggested something else.

A stable point could help people see their relationships without becoming an authority above them.

The following Saturday, Arthur placed a large wooden board outside the village hall. At the top, he wrote three headings: 'I have; I need; I can teach.'

He added no membership form, constitution, logo or five-year strategy. This saved a great deal of time.

Under 'I have', Ellen wrote: 'Eggs. Far too many eggs.'

The mechanic wrote: 'Tools and repair skills.'

Under 'I need', the cafe wrote: 'A regular supply of local eggs.'

The mechanic wrote: 'Someone to sit with Margaret on Tuesday afternoons.'

The gardener wrote: 'Young knees.'

Within a week, people began making arrangements.

The board did not run the village. It simply made local capacity easier to see.

People remained responsible for their own lives but they were no longer pretending that responsibility meant doing everything alone.

Naturally, someone eventually proposed a committee to oversee the board, approve exchanges and introduce a comprehensive points system.

The villagers thanked them for their enthusiasm and gave them responsibility for making tea.

Over time, other things grew from it – shared transport, a tool library, a weekly market and a network of people who could check on an elderly neighbour, repair a roof or teach a useful skill.

None of these arrangements was imposed from above. Each began with a real need and the people able to meet it. When the need changed, the arrangement could change as well.

Arthur began to understand that independence and relationships were not opposites.

Independence meant retaining responsibility for your own life.

Relationship meant allowing what you had to meet what someone else had, so that both of you gained capacity.

A healthy relationship did not make either person smaller; it made something possible that neither could have created alone.

Arthur continued distributing the newspaper. Beside each stack, he placed a sheet containing three questions:

What do you have?

What do you need?

What might become possible if you worked with others without giving away your own judgement?

The sheets began travelling farther than he expected. Other villages created their own boards, repair groups, gardens, kitchens and exchanges. None looked exactly the same because each grew around the people and place where it began.

Like ships at sea, they remained responsible for their own direction. The light simply helped them understand where they stood in relation to the coast, the rocks and each other.

The lighthouse never tried to become the sun, and it never attempted to command the sea.

It provided enough light for people to navigate for themselves.

The axis remained stable, while the forms were free to change.

And, one village at a time, people began tending lights of their own.

● https://substack.com/@spiraleconomy

Mum's agony over A & E 'murder'

by JACQUI DEEVOY

Sarah died 'five seconds after nurse injected her'

Sarah Coupe. Photo: open.substack.com/pub/jacquideevoy

SARAH Coupe was 36 when, in hospital A&E, her life was abruptly ended by a doctor, her mother claims.

Karen Lord had helped save her daughter's life many times before but this time it was impossible. Years of catastrophic medical failure had become normal for the family.

What follows is not a tidy hospital case study. It is the story of a young woman who spent most of her adult life attached to machines and of a parent who learned, too late, that the public services most people assume will protect them can instead look the other way in times of need.

"Sarah was born eight weeks early and, despite having just one kidney and a hole in her heart, she was incredible in every way," says mum Karen.

"As she grew older, I noticed she had a great memory and always remembered the names of everyone she met. As a child and an adult, she was patient and kind, almost always smiling.

"She never shouted or complained, never blamed anyone for any of the terrible things they did to her. She also had a great sense of humour."

For 13 years, Sarah had lived with a dialysis line in her neck, running from her jugular vein into her heart. In 2021, it needed replacing. A few days before Sarah was admitted to hospital for the new line, her dad David, Karen's ex-husband, died.

He had developed a blood clot on his brain after his second AstraZeneca jab. He was hospitalised and underwent brain surgery.

"We were told he was brain dead," Karen recalls. "Sarah was hysterical, begging the doctors to give him more time. But they said it was too late – the doctor had already made the decision to remove life support. The doctor said he would be dead within a couple of hours." By the following morning he had gone.

When Sarah was admitted to the same hospital for her neck line procedure; her dad's dead body was still at the hospital. This naturally compounded the stress she was suffering.

Over the following 18 months, Sarah endured five failed line insertions. The fifth operation lasted a week. The sixth and final operation took place in Manchester in March 2024.

It should have taken 30 minutes. It took six hours. When Karen was allowed into the operating theatre after the procedure, she described her daughter as looking "near to death."

Despite this, she was relieved to note that the new line was working.

Sarah – who, despite her struggles, had produced a film that was nominated for an award called 'It's My Life' back in 2010 – later told her mum she wanted to make another documentary, this time focusing on what she had been put through by the NHS over the previous few years. That film is yet to be made.

On September 21, 2025, Sarah collapsed at home. At first, she could not use her left arm or leg but, within hours, the movement returned. Karen was happy to see her daughter was recovering at the A&E in hospital.

At around 4.45am, however, a nurse and doctor appeared and, before Karen could say anything, the nurse had administered three injections. No one said what they were. The doctor whispered to the nurse, "her heart will stop now." He didn't think Karen could hear him.

"Sarah was dead within five seconds of the doctor making that chilling statement," says Karen. "I challenged him. He fled." In total shock and utterly grief-stricken, Karen couldn't speak for three days.

As soon as her voice returned, Karen reported Sarah's alleged murder to the police. The medical examiner and coroner promised a full investigation including toxicology. Four months later, the case was quietly closed.

The nurse administered three injections. The doctor whispered to the nurse: 'her heart will stop now'

"They all told me to do nothing," Karen says. Then they all did nothing and, to add insult to injury, the Chief of CID phoned Karen to say that the video of her statement had been lost.

Karen set about looking for a lawyer. But over a year later, she has not found one who will take the case.

Expert barristers told her to try a solicitor. Still no luck. An MP's office has asked authorities for paperwork for six months and received nothing. There is no police report the family can obtain, no coroner's report they can use, and no lawyer willing to instruct an independent pathologist for toxicology.

"Over a year later and Sarah is still in the morgue," Karen states. "It's soul-destroying."

On the first anniversary of Sarah's alleged murder, Karen sent a brief account to a dozen media outlets. One reply came back, saying they could not cover it because there was 'no proof' that Sarah was killed.

Karen hasn't forgotten about Sarah's wish to make a documentary. That documentary will now have to be made without Sarah. "Whatever happens, I'm going to do it," she says. "But it will include everything they did to Sarah."

Karen feels completely let down by the police, the coroner, the media and the NHS.

"I quickly realised how bad every single public service – most of which I'd never used before – actually is," Karen says. "There are demons working within the NHS. Maybe being around sickness so much hardens them to it – they become inhumane."

Karen has made several formal complaints to the hospital but has received no help. She now says the only remaining option is to tell the whole story through articles, interviews and videos – not because she wants to start a campaign but because every official door she has knocked on has stayed firmly shut.

"I've seen and suffered so much," she says. "The NHS and many of the people working for it are utterly appalling. My daughter Sarah was murdered in an NHS hospital and I want justice," she adds finally. "What parent wouldn't?"

- https://youtube.com/@jacqui.deevoy
- open.substack.com/pub/jacquideevoy

Truth a popularity contest

Repeated phrases with loaded meanings become 'facts'

by DARREN SMITH

WHEN did wars become police actions, military interventions or operations for freedom and democracy, and torture become enhanced interrogation techniques?

Carbon neutral. Catch a cold. Vacuum cleaner. Credit crunch. Bailout. Global. Prehistoric. Extremist. Common sense.

All of these commonly used words and phrases are fully loaded with preconceived assumptions that your brain will accept as true once you repeat them. The more you repeat, and nearly everyone does, the more 'true' it becomes.

In this type of propaganda – thought restriction through language – what becomes 'the truth' is by means of a popularity contest.

For example, while celebrating the beginning of a new year in the spring – when life begins anew, lambs and daffodils are born – we are reminded of the Creator's awesome power and intelligence that created a natural system of infinite complexity that works year after year, millenium after millenium.

But in the 16th century, the Catholic church and other institutions insisted on moving the natural first day of the year to the middle of winter, when everything is dead and hibernating.

A propaganda campaign lasting 250 years has us today celebrating April Fool's Day and playing practical jokes, while they managed to move the New Year to January, using mocking language for those who carried on the natural way it had been done for millenia.

Repeated phrases from perceived authority shapes peoples' reality

The point of introducing these phrases across the world, now using the all-pervading media-education-entertainment propaganda system is to neutralise problematic questions, and so you go back to either being amused or switched off so as to get on with your day job.

It's insidious, and you should start to notice this in all of the language you use every day, changing where necessary to words and phrases that reflect the actual truth of reality according to your own senses, logic and reasoning.

Perhaps we should do this rather than repeat and reinforce a world view that those in power want us to automatically defer to, because they want to stay in power forever.

'Anarchy' brings up a mental image of riots, cars and buildings on fire, with men in black ski masks throwing molotov cocktails at lines of police. But as we have seen in Europe recently, that describes the system we have now, doesn't it?

Anarchy means without rulers, though not without rules – no-one aside from the present rulers wants to live in an immoral, unjust world. But there is no mental picture created of self-reliant families working, trading, sharing and living together in peace when you utter that word to the majority of the public.

Another example is 'conspiracy theory', actually termed in the late 19th century, way before the CIA, though of course they promulgated it to close people's minds – especially after the Kennedy assassination.

A conspiracy is a group of people plotting together to commit evil against others, and a theory is a supposition about that.

Today, put them together, and it now means for many, 'do not believe your own eyes or logic and reasoning. The idea that the government, the media and the world's most powerful people are lying and committing serious crimes is laughable, those that suggest so are lunatics and cranks and nobody should listen to anything they say.'

A quiet power move by those who own and control the means of communication and information for the whole world: 'everything we do is legit, and anyone who doesn't agree is a crackpot.'

That's how they stay in power.

Change the language, change people's thoughts. Changing behaviour also changes thought patterns as well, surprisingly. That's why they had people doing nonsensical, illogical things during covid. It was modifying their minds.

Language reframes debate. We should be raising our children to understand this and be precise and correct with the words and phrases they use – to actually think about them and make sure they are not simply repeating what they have heard like automatons.

Yes, we have children. Not 'kids'.

Make your 2027 great!

https://tinyurl.com/3tce4zve

The Uncensored Truth TheLIGHT

Revealing who really rules Britannia

Prime Ministers come and go while king pulls the strings

by CALLUM WATKINSON

Why does a symbol need a veto, a privy council and weekly secret meetings with the PM? Photo: Annable Moeller

THINK of a big Highland estate. There's a laird and there's a factor. The laird owns the place and you don't often see him; maybe occasionally riding on the estate or on the way to church at Christmas.

The factor (from Latin, meaning maker or doer) runs the place, he collects the rents, deals with the constant whining of the tenants, fixes the drains and counts the money. If things go wrong, the tenants blame the factor. The laird can always sack him and get a new one.

What TV journalist Laura Kuenssberg and many others refer to as 'the Westminster Government' is the factor. When the boats keep coming and the currency keeps inflating – with the kaleidoscope of societal carnage that creates – it is Westminster's collective face on the front pages and its head the crowd demands in a basket.

In recent years it's been Theresa-shaped, Boris-shaped, Liz-shaped, Rishi-shaped and Keir-shaped. Now it's Andy-shaped, and his much-loved colleagues are already planning who will queue up to put their head into the basket next. Prime Ministers' heads are not in short supply, when one is a king.

That's what a general election is, by the way. A factor-selection exercise. Every few years the tenants are invited to choose which man collects the rents, fixes the drains and takes the blame.

It's exciting – the debates, leafletting, posters, Laura on the telly until four in the morning talking with great authority. And the morning after, the new factor drives to the big house and kisses the laird's hand. The laird is never on the ballot.

How have the British people fallen for this? The answer is through a strategy of minimising the appearance of power combined with an unrelenting effort to consolidate it in secret.

The BBC plays its part. The corporation exists by Royal Charter – granted by the king, through the Privy Council, on the advice of a minister who is also a member of the Privy Council – and it has done so since 1927.

Its chair is formally appointed by the king. That makes the BBC, first and foremost, an arm of the king's kind-of hidden government – not the informative, educational and entertaining version of founder Lord Reith's dreams, though that may be spooned on top by many of the well-meaning folk who work for it. It's a king's herald with a trumpet, not a news service. Put the BBC through this lens and much of what it does will make more sense.

The BBC tells you some things, not others, and then calls the people telling you the other things that they are trumpeters of 'misinformation', using its massive king-sponsored, state-funded trumpet to drown them out.

When you are listening to a royal story or reading about the royal family in popular newspapers, watch or listen for the following type of guff: ceremonial; wonderful pomp and pageantry; we do this kind of thing so well in Britain; a formality; something the tourists enjoy.

All of this gives the same message – there is no real power in the crown any more, it's really just about dressing up. We are told the king's role is 'largely symbolic' so often that nobody thinks to ask why a symbol needs a veto, a council sworn to lifelong secrecy, a network of appointees in every county and a weekly meeting with the Prime Minister that nobody is allowed to minute.

The tortured national conversation about the money adds texture: cuts to the Sovereign Grant, the 'trimming' of the royal household, accepted with a weary sigh and a stiff upper lip.

Meanwhile here is what Charlie Sausage Fingers has actually just pulled off with the help of a couple of generations of Privy Counsellors.

The king's money – the Sovereign Grant – isn't voted on by MPs like it used to be. Since 2012, it's been a fixed slice of the profits of the Crown Estate, the vast property empire that includes most of the seabed around England, Wales and Northern Island.

In March 2025, the Royal Trustees – the Prime Minister, Sir Keir Starmer, and the Chancellor, Rachel Reeves, both privy counsellors, plus the king's own money man, the Keeper of the Privy Purse – signed off the annual grant that funds the Royal Household.

It jumped from £86.3m to £132.1m – a 53 per cent rise – on the back of record profits from wind farm leases on the Crown's seabed. This year, it's £137.9m. That's an extra £97m in two years, officially to finish doing up Buckingham Palace.

The term 'windfall', while amusing in this context, is not accurate. There is something unexpected about a windfall. This mother-of-all carbon credits arrived as a result of a chain of decisions by successive waves of privy counsellors going back nearly 20 years:

- 2008 – the Climate Change Act, steered through by Ed Miliband, commits Britain to cutting emissions by 80 per cent.
- 2011 – the Sovereign Grant Act, George Osborne's work, ties the royal grant to the profits of the Crown Estate – seabed included – and makes sure it can never go down.
- 2013 – the Energy Act, under Ed Davey, guarantees wind farms a fixed price for their power for fifteen years – topped up through your energy bills whenever the market price falls short.
- 2019 – Theresa May's government raises the target to net zero by 2050, nodded through the Commons without a vote.
- 2020 – Boris Johnson, a privy counsellor since 2016, promises to make Britain "the Saudi Arabia of wind".
- 2021 – energy giants bid nearly £900m a year for the right to reserve patches of the Crown's seabed.
- 2023 – Rishi Sunak and Jeremy Hunt, privy counsellors both, cut the Crown's share of the profits from 25 to 12 per cent. The wind money was so vast the grant still went up by half.
- 2025 – Starmer and Reeves sign off the cheque.

Red, blue, yellow – it makes no difference. The factors change and the laird gets paid.

The king still depends on parliament for money, in a way, but throughout British history, parliament's power over the crown was the power of the purse.

The king needed coins so he needed the people who held the bag. These days the King's money, like yours and mine, means something different. It is conjured out of thin air – by banks when they lend, and by the Bank of England whenever it prints, as it did to the tune of £895 billion after 2008 without a single vote in Parliament.

- huntandgathertv.substack.com
  King Con: The Trick at The Top
  https://tinyurl.com/25378mkm

Please subscribe and support us at https://thelightpaper.co.uk

Dying in their sleep

by JACQUI DEEVOY

Exploring jabs link with the sudden deaths of children and young adults

Dead before they wake. Photo: jacquideevoy.substack.com

THE phrase 'died in their sleep' appears often enough now to make it feel as if there's a new pattern emerging.

In January 2026, my cousin's 25-year-old son went to bed one night and never woke up. My cousin – the young man's dad – died suddenly eight months later, I believe of literal heartbreak.

Many news reports of young people dying in their sleep now abound. These include reports on the tragic deaths of a 16-year-old in 2021 with an inquest recording sudden adult death. A pathologist said her heart "simply stopped beating" in their sleep, possibly from an arrhythmia, with no clear structural cause.

Then there was an 18-year-old from Warrington in 2022 who died in their sleep from arrhythmia linked to myocarditis (heart inflammation).

More recently, there were young people, aged 27, 24, 20 and 19 all reported as having died in their sleep. These are just a handful of cases; there are plenty more.

Families describe no warning and death usually discovered in the morning. To be under 50 and to die that way feels wrong. It's hard to accept in older people too but for someone to pass peacefully in their sleep in their 80s or 90s is often seen as a blessing.

It would appear in recent years that the number of young people dying whilst sleeping has risen. But has it? Many of us are constantly on the lookout for these deaths, especially those looking to make a connection between sudden death in the young and the introduction in late 2020 of the mRNA covid 'vaccines'.

But before we look into the cause – or causes – we first must investigate whether it's actually true that the number of these shocking deaths has risen.

After some investigation, I discovered that the number has indeed risen. In the United States, mortality among adults aged 25 to 44 was about 70 per cent higher in 2023 than it would have been had the downward trend of the early 2000s continued, according to an analysis in the Journal of the American Medical Association of more than three million deaths from 1999 to 2023.

Excess mortality in that age group was already elevated before covid was announced, then accelerated in 2020 and 2021.

By 2023 it had fallen from the alleged pandemic peak but remained far above the old baseline. Drug poisoning apparently accounted for roughly a third of the excess.

Did this include poisoning by allopathic drugs and other medical interventions and treatments? Not surprisingly, I can't find any information on that. Transport deaths, alcohol, homicide and a residual category of so-called natural causes made up most of the rest. Cardiometabolic disease – high blood pressure, metabolic disorders, circulatory disease – contributed about nine per cent.

British and European life expectancy stalled or reversed for working-age adults over the same period, with the sharpest damage in poorer areas. The Office for National Statistics and European registries documented excess deaths in younger adults during and after the 'pandemic' years, though the mix of causes differs by country.

What the headlines rarely say is how many of these poor souls were actually found in bed.

'Died in their sleep' is clearly a circumstance, not a diagnosis. Opioid and mixed-drug overdoses – accidental or deliberate – often occur at night. The person is alone, they go to bed, breathing slows while they are sleeping until respiration stops completely, and they are then usually discovered in the morning.

In U.S. data, overdose became the leading cause of death for adults 25 to 44 around the middle of the last decade and rose several-fold after the use of fentanyl – a synthetic opioid said to be 50 times stronger than heroin – spread.

Alcohol-related deaths climbed too. Suicide rates in the same age band rose by more than 40 per cent between 2000 and the early 2020s. None of that meant a new mystery illness. It requires drugs that stop breathing, despair and hours in which no-one is there to intervene.

Vaccination – and the mRNA covid jabs – is a potential cause many people now want tested.

The evidence splits by study type: autopsy series have attributed a number of unexpected deaths to myocarditis after the mRNA injections. A Heidelberg series in Clinical Research in Cardiology (Schwab et al., 2022) examined 25 people who died unexpectedly within 20 days of receiving a covid shot.

In four who had received an mRNA vaccine, pathologists found acute epi-myocarditis without another disease that explained the death, and concluded it was the likely cause of arrhythmogenic cardiac failure.

A Korean case report (Choi et al., Journal of Korean Medical Science, 2021) described a 22-year-old man who developed chest pain five days after a first Pfizer dose and died hours later. The autopsy showed atrial myocarditis, and Korean authorities called the link 'possibly related'.

A later review of published autopsy reports assembled 28 cases the authors judged likely causal, with a mean age of about 44 and a median of three days from the last dose to death.

These papers do not estimate a rate per million doses, and they do not show that nocturnal deaths under 50 rose because of the mRNA injections.

However, mRNA vaccines are, separately, an established 'rare' cause of myocarditis, mostly in young men after a second dose. Many fatal cases have been recorded, although mainstream science and media continue to tell us these fatalities are extremely uncommon.

A National Academies review judged the evidence inadequate to accept or reject a causal link between the mRNA vaccines and sudden death as a category.

We have recently been inundated with reports of SADS (Sudden Adult Death Syndrome). It's been touted as the adult version of SIDS (Sudden Infant Death Syndrome) and framed as a new explanation for these unexpected and seemingly inexplicable deaths of adults of all ages.

A large section of the public is understandably suspicious of such a syndrome and believe there is always a cause. People – especially young people – do not simply drop dead or die in their sleep for no reason.

Like many conditions in the past, the causes are discovered a long time after syndromes are introduced. Will SADS be renamed once the true cause is found one day in the future?

Please pass The Light on when you've read it

Cattle-logue of concerns

Farmers feel pinch from following herd on methane cuts

by ALEX G MACLAREN

BOVAER is a food additive for cows introduced as part of the net zero emissions targets to lower methane emissions.

But a substance can reduce methane emissions and still have toxicological risks. A regulator can authorise use while imposing conditions and exposure limits. Neither, by itself, establishes that exposure is safe – so let's take a look.

Let us focus on 3-nitrooxypropanol (3-NOP), the active ingredient in Bovaer, including its metabolism, animal-feed studies, reproductive and general toxicity testing, occupational hazards, and the distinction between risks to cattle, farm workers, consumers and the wider environment.

The European Food Safety Authority (EFSA) 2021 assessment revealed that laboratory tests found chromosomal damage, while other tests were negative or inconclusive. EFSA's conclusion was that the genotoxic potential of 3-NOP could not be ruled out. This is a substantive toxicological uncertainty.

High-dose studies found testicular damage, impaired sperm production and reduced sperm counts in a two-year rat study.

In one short-term screening study, none of the female rats in the highest-dose group became pregnant. The regulatory assessment attributed the reproductive toxicity to a metabolite called NOPA (the compound formed when the primary alcohol group of 3-NOP is oxidized).

That same study found that rare benign mesenchymal tumours and related tissue changes were reported. EFSA's panel considered the findings biologically relevant and did not treat them as random background findings.

But, quite bizarrely, the pathology working group concluded that the overall evidence did not establish carcinogenicity. However the EFSA concluded that the active ingredient could be harmful if inhaled, and identified skin and eye irritation. The assessment also flagged inhalation exposure as an additional concern in light of the unresolved genotoxicity findings.

In February 2026, EFSA requested further data after Danish authorities reported digestive and metabolic disorders at approximately 400 of 1,600 dairy farms that had started using 3-NOP. EFSA initiated a new assessment of safety for the target animals. That makes the cattle-health question an active regulatory issue, rather than merely a historical concern.

Our farts are as natural as yours. Photo: Brianna Sanders

High-dose studies found testicular damage, impaired sperm production and reduced sperm counts in a two-year rat study

EFSA's review found that 3-NOP was rapidly and extensively metabolised in the rumen (the largest of the four stomach compartments in a cow) and animal tissues yet NOPA was detected in plasma, and very low concentrations were reported in milk in some testing.

One reported milk measurement reached 3.66 micrograms per kilogram in a single animal. EFSA concluded that Bovaer used under the assessed conditions did not raise concern for consumer safety. That conclusion is based on the exposure and toxicology evidence considered in the assessment, rather than on a claim that no molecules or metabolites can ever reach milk or meat.

A report from the Japan Food Safety Commission (FSCJ) in 2024 documented adverse effects in male reproductive organs, and positive results in certain laboratory genotoxicity tests, and benign tumours were observed in rats.

The FSCJ published its short English assessment in Food Safety, volume 12, issue 2, on June 28, 2024. The underlying Japanese assessment was issued in October 2023. The English publication is an extract, not the complete assessment.

A research and development organisation in Denmark, SEGES, carried out a survey of Danish dairy farms in 2025.

It revealed that, out of 642 farms analysed, 410 reported digestive or metabolic disorders, 417 reported reduced food intake and 432 reported an overall reduced milk yield – with a substantial number of participating farmers reporting production and health problems during the period of Bovaer use.

At Follerbakken Farm, Denmark, cows became ill within five days of eating feed containing Bovaer, some were paralysed and others had the inability to stand, digestive issues and a loss of appetite. Their account attributes harm to calves and potential consumer exposure to NOPA.

At Huibert van Dorp's Dairy Farm, Denmark, approximately one week after Bovaer was introduced, the farmer noticed the increasing number of cows experiencing diarrhoea. But this was only the beginning. Among other reported problems were mastitis, rumen issues and an unexplained reduction in milk production. It was so severe that more than 30 cows a day needed attention, one cow died and 15 other cows were receiving antibiotics.

The Danish cases were not just limited to the above. Danish agricultural organisations received growing concerns from dairy farmers, vets and advisors about cattle being ill after Bovaer was introduced.

The reported problems also included fever, lethargy and bloating. On November 22, 2025 the Danish Veterinary and Food Administration issued a public notice stating that farmers could stop feeding Bovaer if they believed their cows were becoming ill.

In Norway, food company Norsk Melkeravare suspended its Bovaer trial while reviewing reports and experiences from Denmark.

An earlier 2019 study on mutagenicity and genotoxicity assessment was largely contrary to subsequent research. Several authors of the paper were actually affiliated with DSM Nutritional Products, the company associated directly with Bovaer.

Having said that, the assessment did reveal that chromosome damage was detected in laboratory cells from rats under the test conditions.

In the UK, Marks & Spencer announced in April 2024 that it was innovating its way to net zero – the initiative was Bovaer.

Yet this was not explicitly stated in its article. The Guardian picked this up a day later and confirmed Bovaer was being used, manufactured by DSM-Firmenich.

Then came international dairy farm collective Arla's UK trial, announced in November 2024, that involved Morrisons, Tesco and Aldi as retail partners.

Farmers reportedly raised concerns about cow health, and the manufacturer said these were being investigated. The trial ended and a review began.

Yet the public reporting does not provide the complete final results needed and thus safety has not been established. If a methane-reducing additive is being introduced into the food-production chain, why should consumers have to piece together its safety record from regulatory assessments, residue studies, press statements and incomplete trial reporting?

Until safety has been established, the word 'approved' simply remains a regulatory status. It is not a substitute for transparency or safety.

Death by organ donation

Top ten reasons for opting out of harvesting protocol

by JACQUI DEEVOY

THOUSANDS of people worldwide are deciding NOT to be organ donors, and, in countries where an opt-in system is in operation, actively opting out is the only way to do it. If you do not opt out, you are considered a donor.

I've been researching organ donation for around ten years, and, earlier this year, in the hope of waking up the public to the truth about organ harvesting and the brain-death myth, the documentary I made with filmmaker and author Richie Brown was released on YouTube.

The following ten reasons, drawn from the arguments and cases highlighted by critics such as Dr. Heidi Klessig (retired anesthesiologist, author of The Brain Death Fallacy), Dr. Paul Byrne (neonatologist and long-critic of brain-death criteria), the documentary The Gift Of Life? (which features both physicians and recovery accounts), and reported near-miss cases of people diagnosed as brain-dead who later showed signs of life during preparation for organ procurement.

These reflect the perspectives of those sources and related investigations – mainstream medicine generally upholds brain-death (irreversible cessation of all brain function, including brainstem) as legal and biological death under the Uniform Determination of Death Act and accepts organ donation as ethical and lifesaving when properly determined.

Controversies exist around criteria, testing and errors. Here's the list of reasons to opt out of organ donation:

You're fair game unless you opt out. Photo: Marek Studzinski

1. Brain-death is not equivalent to biological death. Critics argue that patients declared brain-dead often still have beating hearts, circulation, respiration (supported), temperature regulation, hormone production and other integrated bodily functions. Byrne and Klessig claim that this is a legal/medical construct created primarily to enable organ procurement and is not true death (cessation of circulation, respiration and all brain function). Most major organs from truly dead bodies are generally unsuitable for transplant.

2. Documented cases of recovery after brain-death diagnosis during or near organ harvesting. Multiple accounts exist of patients (e.g. TJ Hoover in Kentucky after overdose) who thrashed, tracked with eyes and cried on the operating table; others like Zack Dunlap, Jahi McMath and Colleen Burns showed responsiveness or recovered completely after being prepared for organ procurement. Family members and hospital staff sometimes observe movements post-brain-death diagnosis and have these dismissed as 'reflexes'. In the U.S., federal reviews found concerning neurological signs in dozens of authorised-but-not-completed donations.

3. Apnea testing and other determination methods can be harmful and imperfect. The apnea test (removing ventilator support to check for breathing drive) is criticised as potentially precipitating or worsening injury. Criteria have varied – some guidelines acknowledge possible residual function (e.g. hypothalamic activity in a significant percentage, EEG activity in others). Misdiagnosis risk, especially with confounders like drugs, hypothermia or metabolic issues, is cited as a reason for caution.

4. Organ procurement requires living donors. Vital organs (heart, liver, lungs, etc.) need to be taken while circulation continues for viability. Critics say this means the procedure itself causes death – death by donation – in someone who is still biologically alive under traditional criteria, violating the 'dead donor rule'. Anaesthesia or paralytics are sometimes used which would be unnecessary for a true corpse.

5. Pressure and conflicts of interest in the organ procurement system. Organ Procurement Organisations (OPOs) face performance metrics tied to donation rates. Investigations have flagged inadequate neurological examinations, questionable consent, and cases proceeding despite signs incompatible with donation. Families report feeling rushed or that recovery chances were downplayed.

6. Lack of full, informed consent for registrants. In countries that have opt-in systems, signing up as a donor rarely includes detailed discussion of brain-death controversies, testing limitations, residual function possibilities or the fact that procurement occurs while the body is warm and circulating. Critics argue the public is not told anything about the philosophical/medical debate that has persisted for decades.

7. Potential for premature withdrawal of care. Once donation is authorised, focus can shift from maximal treatment/recovery efforts to organ preservation. Critics claim this can deny patients time or therapies that might allow improvement, especially in younger or overdose-related cases where recovery has occurred.

8. Religious, ethical and philosophical objections to redefining death. Many (including some religious traditions referenced by Dr. Byrne) hold that death requires irreversible cessation of circulation and respiration, not just brain function. Declaring someone dead while the heart beats and body integrates is seen as a lie that facilitates taking life. New proposals (e.g. 'death by organ donation' in some literature) heightens these concerns.

9. Tissue donation is distinguishable and less problematic. Critics like Dr. Klessig often support tissue (corneas, skin, bone, valves) donation from true cadavers after confirmed circulatory death, as these tolerate ischemia better and do not require a 'beating-heart' donor. Opting out of the full organ-donor registry avoids the brain-death pathway while still allowing family-directed tissue gifts after death is clear.

10. Better to protect the living patient and rely on living donations or other alternatives where possible. Living donation of paired organs (kidney) or liver lobes is presented as ethical because both parties remain alive. Critics urge prioritising recovery potential, clearer death standards (true circulatory criteria) and public awareness over expanding the pool via contested brain-death declarations. Opting out is framed as ensuring one is not treated as a resource while still potentially alive.

FURTHER INFORMATION

If you're just at the entrance to the 'organ harvesting and brain-death lie' rabbit hole, here are some links you should check out:

- The Gift Of Life (2026)
  an investigation into organ harvesting and the brain death myth https://tinyurl.com/3txp4e6e
- Dr. Heidi Klessig admits to 'murder by dismemberment'
  "I'm Complicit in Medical Murder by Dismemberment": A Doctor Speaks Out About UK Organ Donation Horror
  https://tinyurl.com/245vzv9v
- My interview with Dr. Heidi Klessig: DR. HEIDI KLESSIG
  "I'm complicit in murder by dismemberment" https://tinyurl.com/4m2xyy5t
- NHS online opt out service (UK only)
  https://tinyurl.com/2tf7d4rb
- Interview with Dr. Paul Byrne:
  Brain death and organ donation by dr Paul A. Byrne https://tinyurl.com/mr5t3253
- To get organ donor code 115 removed from your UK driving licence contact DVLA Driving Licence Enquiries: 0300 790 6801
- Opt out cards available here:
  https://tinyurl.com/57jayhx6

Always follow the money

by MONEY CIRCUS

The Bank of England's origin story reveals those calling shots

THE threat of worldwide conflict today is often compared with the descent into World War One, or with the disintegration of the Weimar Republic in Germany before World War Two.

But there are other parallels – such as when new monetary systems were put in place that enabled industry and war, and which triggered devastating social change and suffering.

Picture a silver shilling or a sixpence in the year 1695. It looks right. It bears the likeness of the monarch. But run your thumb along it and you find it's been clipped. Someone with a pair of shears has stripped a sliver of silver, made a rough attempt with a file to round the edge, then passed it on. By the mid-1690s, much of the coin in England weighed about half what it should.

The government stepped in to solve the crisis, but upgrading to coins with milled edges led people to hoard them. Bullion was being shipped abroad to pay for war. The monetary squeeze aggravated an economy already suffering from wartime taxes, disruption to trade and poor harvests.

The people were about to witness a series of revolutions: one was monetary, which in time would finance an industrial revolution; the consequence was a social revolution; and it was all kicked off by a political revolution.

We think of 1688 as a tale of liberty – the Glorious Revolution, a bloodless change of king, a Bill of Rights. But it rarely mentions the cost.

England had just come through a civil war, in which it beheaded a king and declared itself a republic. Then it restored the monarchy but the two Stuart brothers were barely more popular than their father had been. A group of leading men wrote to William of Orange, the Dutch ruler, who was married to James II's daughter. In November 1688, William arrived with an army. Within months he was William III of England.

The Bank of England flies flag for top-down control. Photo:

William had intent. He was already at war with the French. He had become Stadtholder of the United Provinces in 1672 and had been trying to eject Louis XIV from Dutch territory.

He accepted the invitation to seize the English throne in part to add its military, naval and financial power to his alliance.

But William did not arrive alone. Amsterdam was the centre of banking in the 17th century and he had a war to fight.

The states of Holland and Amsterdam City Council were backing about half of the war budget. Merchant bankers like Francisco Lopes Suasso lent to the stadtholder (a historical title for a provincial governor or lieutenant representing a monarch personally), including two million guilders which he made available to William to support his invasion of England.

The Amsterdam Wisselbank, which had pioneered bills of exchange and operated a bullion market, provided the network.

When William took the throne, these mechanisms would be imported to England. It was not the first time, as Sir Thomas Gresham had established the Royal Exchange under Elizabeth I, based on the Amsterdam Bourse exchange market.

Did William bring his merchant bankers, or did they install him, with an eye to the opportunities in financing the growing English empire?

The arrival of the Dutch king and his bankers coincided with a shift in power to parliament at a time when politics was aligning with finance and industry, and political parties were formed.

What was advancing more rapidly was the financial system, and its ability to enrich a new class of manufacturers and to finance war.

The English elite argued about what kind of country to have. The Whigs, backed by merchants and financiers, said, 'if we're going to fight a great power, we need a strong state. More taxes, more planning, more credit.' The Tories, mostly landowners, said keep the state small. Fight at sea if you must. Don't mortgage the country.

The Tories shared a dislike of the pro-French policies of James II but they did not see Louis XIV as a threat, perhaps because as landowners they were more insular. A war should defend the new order in England and keep Scotland and Ireland onside.

More so, the Tories wanted to dismantle the English fiscal-military state that had been growing by leaps and bounds since the civil war of the 1640s. Wars could be fought if necessary on an expeditionary basis but the state should be contained – big empire, small state.

Yet French trade was seen as a direct challenge to the classes of new money.

They favoured war with France because Louis XIV, they said, wanted to steal their business. First minister Jean-Baptiste Colbert was developing industry and foreign trade through mercantilism, using tariffs to limit the purchase of expensive imports, to stem the outflow of gold and silver bullion.

The English, because of their appetite for French goods, faced an outflow of bullion. Their love of all things Chinese would cause a similar problem, and the English would force opium wars upon the East to recoup the silver they had spent.

"We must do anything rather than be slaves to the French," said the Whig and Barbados plantation owner Edward Littleton.

War with France was a general inclination, from the City of London and the East India Company to Protestants and a widely shared opinion that restraining France was simply in the common interest of Europe.

The Whigs said that fighting a great power required financial and industrial planning; building up war manufacturing, which would require new monetary instruments and a central bank. The Whigs wanted a big and interventionist state that would serve the interests of the new urban and manufacturing classes.

The Whigs won that argument. So how do you pay for a big war?

In 1694, they invented a new way: a group of wealthy men lent millions of pounds to the government at an eight per cent interest rate. The money was raised in about twelve days.

In return, they got a charter, the right to issue banknotes out of nothing, and the job of then managing the nation's debt.

They called it the Bank of England.

- moneycircus.substack.com
  Industrial Revolution, War & Social Change
  https://tinyurl.com/me48aa5b

Make childhood in care last resort

Campaign to protect families from heavy-handed safeguarding

by TERRY STRONG

A MOTHER-OF-SEVEN and grandmother-of-six has taken her campaign for children's services reform to Westminster, calling for stronger family preservation, meaningful early intervention and enforceable accountability.

On October 19, Debbie Turner travelled from her home in Workington, Cumbria, to the Houses of Parliament carrying a proposed bill and evidence gathered from families reporting troubling experiences with children's services across the UK.

Her journey was deeply personal; Ms Turner says her determination to challenge the system began with her own childhood experiences in care and continued through decades of involvement with children's services as a mother.

Now 47, she argues that the same fundamental problems recur across generations – families seeking support but experiencing intervention, disputed allegations, inadequate assistance and difficulties challenging official decisions.

Ms Turner's campaign seeks to examine these experiences collectively rather than treating every complaint as an isolated incident.

She describes being made a ward of court during childhood, experiencing institutional care and later facing repeated family court proceedings involving her own children.

She says court-ordered support was not consistently delivered and that historical records were difficult to obtain or scrutinise.

These experiences prompted her to collect testimony from other parents, grandparents and relatives.

By October, her campaign had received 151 accounts and reports relating to children's services. Of these, 91 contained sufficient detail to be included in her evidence collection. The remaining 60 were accounts naming a council or describing experiences without enough supporting detail for formal inclusion.

These are campaign submissions, not independently-verified findings of misconduct.

Contributors have described concerns about inadequate early support, family separation, children's wishes, sibling relationships, disability assessments, procedural fairness and access to records.

Turner believes these accounts warrant systematic, independent examination.

Debbie Turner at Westminster on October 19, carrying her parliamentary submission

Call for evidence and action

Ms Turner is encouraging families to submit factual, anonymised accounts that identify the relevant local authority, dates, concerns, decisions and support offered or withheld.

She urges contributors to retain original documentation and avoid publicly disclosing confidential children's records or restricted family court material.

The campaign calls for independent examination of recurring patterns, improved early intervention, enforceable procedural safeguards and greater accountability where failures are established.

Ms Turner's central message is straightforward: legislation, implementation and accountability must work together.

Having experienced the system as a child, teenager and mother, she wants the next generation to inherit something different.

Families, care-experienced adults, professionals and policymakers are invited to contribute evidence, examine the six-pillar charter and support informed discussion about children's services reform.

- EMAIL: FromCaretoCaring@gmail.com

Inspired partly by the democratic principles of the 19th century Chartist movement, Ms Turner has developed a six-pillar charter for children's services reform.

1. Prevention before separation: families should receive meaningful, timely assistance before separation is considered, wherever children can safely remain at home.
2. The child's voice and emotional wellbeing: children's wishes, emotional needs, attachments and sibling relationships must be properly considered.
3. Evidence, fairness and due process: decisions affecting family life must rest on properly tested evidence, lawful procedures and opportunities to challenge disputed information.
4. Accountability and independent oversight: families need accessible, genuinely independent mechanisms to examine failures and secure appropriate remedies.
5. Family preservation and reunification: safe family care, kinship arrangements and reunification should be actively explored and supported.
6. Transparency, representation and legislative reform: families must be able to understand decisions, access appropriate records and participate meaningfully in proceedings affecting their lives.

Ms Turner's framework goes beyond identifying desirable reforms. Each pillar is examined through three connected tiers.

Tier One: Legislation – what does the law require? This involves examining existing legislation, including the Children Act 1989, identifying protections already available and considering where clearer duties or amendments may be necessary.

Tier Two: Implementation – is the law being followed? A legal safeguard has limited value if it is not delivered in practice. This tier examines assessments, early intervention, family support, decision-making, professional training and compliance with existing duties.

Tier Three: Accountability – what happens when the law is not followed? The final tier considers independent scrutiny, transparent records, complaints, effective remedies and consequences for established failures.

Applied across six pillars, these three tiers create 18 areas of examination. The objective is to distinguish between gaps in legislation, failures of implementation and weaknesses in accountability.

Ms Turner argues that new laws alone cannot resolve systemic problems if existing safeguards are poorly implemented or breaches have no meaningful remedy.

The campaign also draws attention to the psychological impact of separating children from familiar caregivers.

Researchers John Bowlby and James Robertson described responses to separation involving protest, despair and detachment.

Although individual children's reactions differ, this research raises important questions about how emotional distress, attachment and continuity of relationships are considered in care decisions.

Ms Turner maintains that safeguarding must address both the risks children may face within families and the potential harms arising from unnecessary or poorly managed separation.

She recognises that some children require protective intervention. Her argument is that decisions must be proportionate, evidence-based and subject to meaningful scrutiny.

On October 19, Ms Turner personally delivered her proposed bill to parliamentary reception, asking for it to be passed to Baroness Sue Hayman through the appropriate channels.

The submission followed months of collecting accounts, identifying recurring concerns and developing proposals for reform.

Delivery does not mean that Parliament has formally introduced or adopted the proposal. Ms Turner is seeking consideration, engagement and a route towards legislative scrutiny.

For her, the journey represented a transition from personal campaigning to a collective call for institutional accountability.

The master of mayhem

by ALAN RUNDLE

Sir Harold's deception and propaganda in service of warmongers

POLITICIAN and broadcaster Harold Nicolson was a high-level conspirator who worked with others to cause worldwide mayhem in the 20th century.

Take away the historic sugarcoating given to Sir Harold, who died in 1968, and we see a sinister and scheming Machiavellian.

He occupied a high position in the pyramid of power. He was a master of propaganda, working at the BBC for many years, with the intention of brainwashing Britain.

He was a diplomat, a BBC radio and television broadcaster, and a governor on its board. He was a senior member of the Ministry of Information from 1940-1941, a newspaper columnist, a Member of Parliament, a National Trust board member, an author, a book reviewer, an editor and a publisher.

The pyramid of power that he served continues to this day in attempts to control billions of people in the world. Most people live outside of this pyramid, oblivious to its existence.

The pyramid consists of 66 degrees. At the base are 33 degrees of Freemasonry, above which are 20 degrees of the Illuminati, and at the apex of the pyramid are 13 degrees of Families (not 13 families, but 13 degrees of families). The families created the First World War and the Second World War, conjuring the leaders on both sides, controlling the twists and turns of the wars, the destruction and the reconstruction.

Nigel Nicolson, another writer and politician, wrote about his father Sir Harold: 'He knew that he belonged to an elite...and he tended to feel that people outside that elite had something wrong with them: businessmen, for example, the humbler type of schoolmaster or clergyman, most women, actors, Americans, Jews, all coloured or Levantine peoples, and the great mass of the middle and working classes.' (Harold Nicolson, Diaries and Letters, 1930 -1939, pages 24 and 25).

Sir Harold Nicolson – part of a network that orchestrated world affairs: Photo: pd

Networking with the elite

The people Harold Nicolson associated with included Allen Dulles, James de Rothschild, Winston Churchill, Frederick A. Lindemann, Edward Marsh, Robert Bernays, Bernard Baruch, Montagu Norman, Max Aitken (Lord Beaverbrook), John Maynard Keynes, H.G. Wells, George Bernard Shaw, Rudyard Kipling, Ian Fleming and William Somerset Maugham.

He served as a diplomat in Madrid, Constantinople, Tehran, Berlin, Baghdad and Paris.

In 1914, Sir Harold's father, Arthur Nicolson, was Permanent Head of the Foreign Office, working with Edward Grey, Winston Churchill, David Lloyd George, Alfred Milner, Henry Asquith and others to engineer the start of the First World War. These were some of the real 'masters of war'.

And in 1917, Sir Harold, while working as a Foreign Office official, was a key figure in the drafting of the Balfour Declaration which gave official British support for 'the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish'.

In 1919, Allen Dulles (later head of the CIA) regarded Sir Harold as his 'best friend' among British diplomats, when they were drafting aspects of the Versailles Treaty, in Paris.

Between October 1919 and May 1920, he was in Paris as a significant figure in the organisation of the League of Nations.

And in 1931, Sir Harold supported the creation of Oswald Mosley's new party and joined it. He edited Mosley's paper, Action. In the same year, he stood as a parliamentary candidate for Mosley's party, losing the contest. He also discussed the design of uniforms for a 'trained and disciplined force'.

From May 1940 to July 1941, Sir Harold was appointed as a minister in the Ministry of Information (read Ministry of Propaganda) by Winston Churchill, immediately after the latter became Prime Minister.

In 1946, he flew to Nuremberg to attend the Nuremberg Tribunal, at which 21 of the most senior Nazis were on trial.

While there, he dined with the likes of American Nuremberg tribunal judge Biddle, Lord Justice Lawrence (later Lord Oaksey), Sir Norman Birkett, a British judge at the tribunal, and David Maxwell Fyfe, the Deputy Chief Prosecutor – all prior to judgements being made.

> He knew that he belonged to an elite... and he tended to feel that people outside that elite had something wrong with them

Was the real purpose of his visit to the Nuremberg Tribunal to secure the acquittal of Hjalmar Schacht – 'Hitler's banker' – who had close links to Wall Street and the Bank of England?

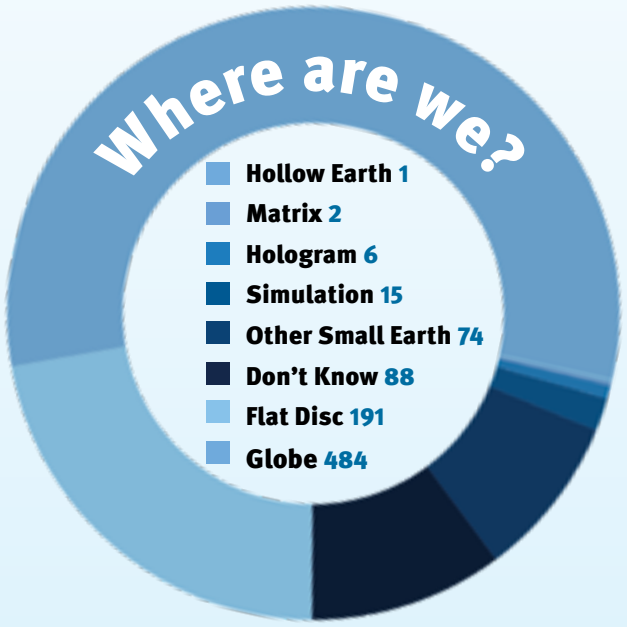

In 1962, one year before the assassination of President John F. Kennedy, Sir Harold met former CIA director Allen Dulles in New York.

Sir Harold's three volumes of Diaries and Letters (edited by son Nigel), 1930-1939, 1939-1945, and 1945-1962, reveal some of his network of social connections, especially of his fellow luncheon and dinner guests, at exclusive hotels and clubs, including the Savoy, the Savoy Grill, the Dorchester, the Ritz, Claridges, the Reform Club, the Carlton, the Travellers Club, the Beefsteak Club, and meals and meetings at Chequers and 10 Downing Street. Sir Harold also had Chatham House meetings.

The Uncensored Truth

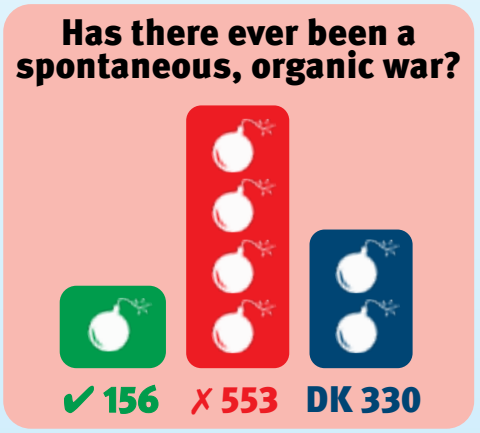

TheLIGHT The

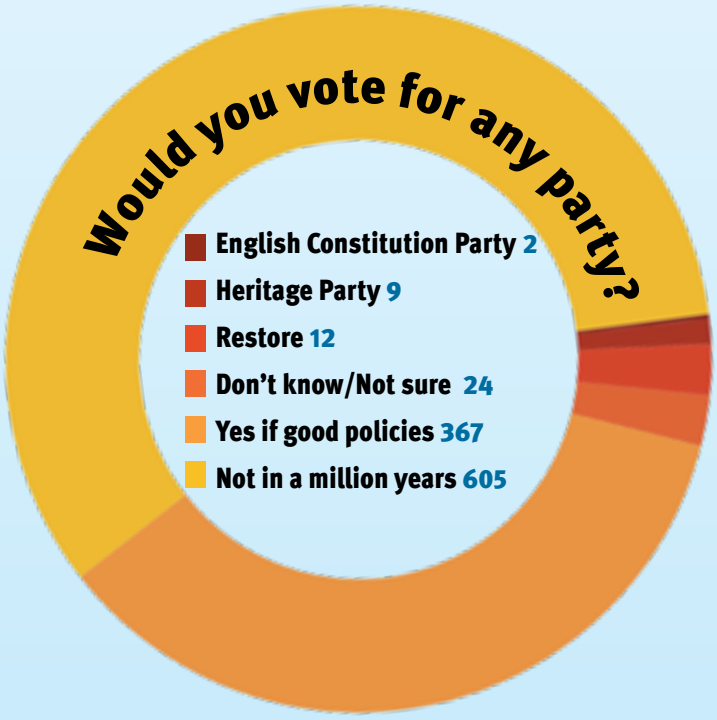

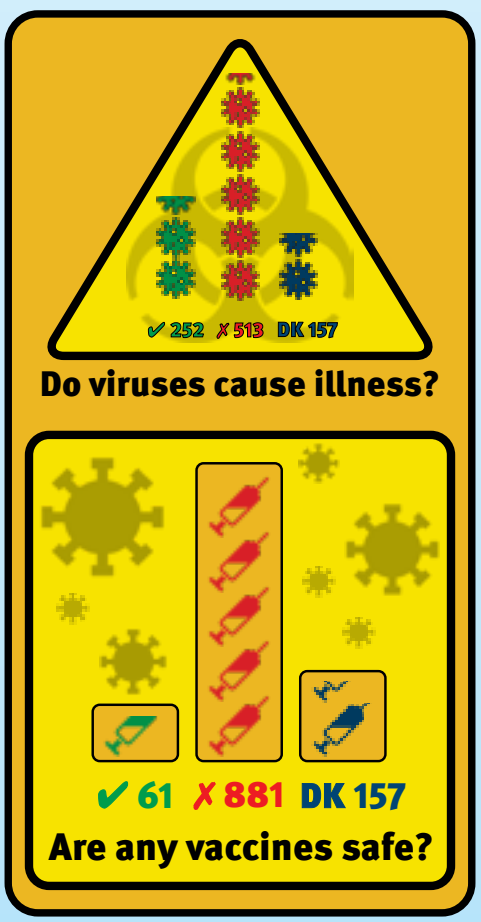

✔ = Yes ✗ =

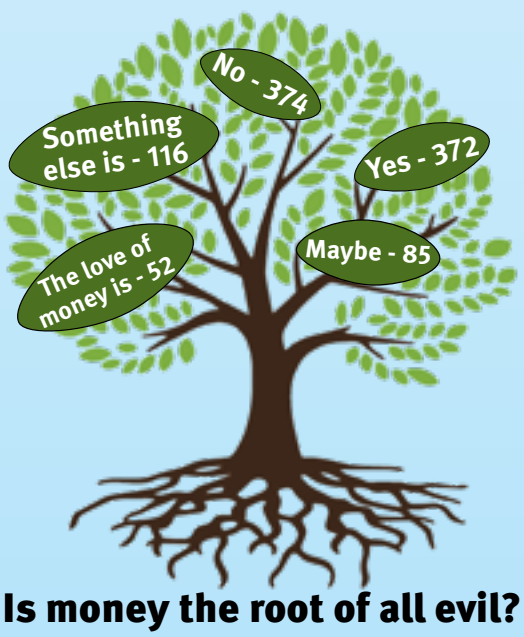

e Big Questions

teiner/
New
chools,
etc.
67
cated?

Yes 27

No 773

DK 157

Are exams and qualifications the best way to develop young people?

DURING October 2026, we asked you to fill in a survey on some of the biggest questions – and more than 1,000 people completed the questionnaire.

Here are the results of most of the short-answer questions. The long form answers may well be used for another feature soon. Some of the totals don't add up to 1,000 because of unclear or missing responses.

Thank you to everyone who took part – we hope you enjoy seeing where your opinion sits across a range of important and interesting topics.

Keep up to date with what is really going on in the world by reading and sharing The Light.

- Please visit our website at thelightpaper.co.uk to subscribe

= No DK = Dont Know

TRUE – 693

FAKE – 124

DK – 202

Jesus Christ

TRUE – 666 (NOT KIDDING!)

FAKE – 180

DK – 173

Devil/Satan, etc.

TRUE – 674

FAKE – 142

DK – 202

Demons

TRUE – 425

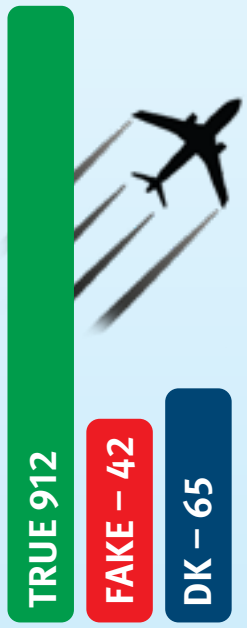

FAKE – 322

DK – 272

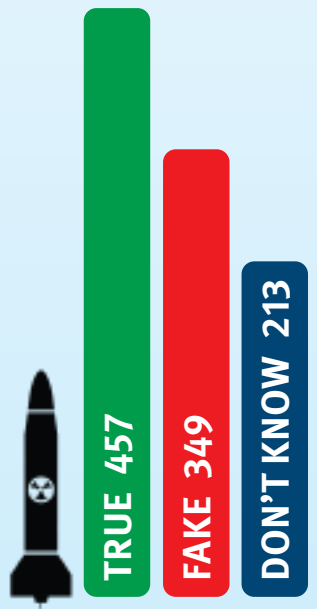

Aliens

Climate Crisis

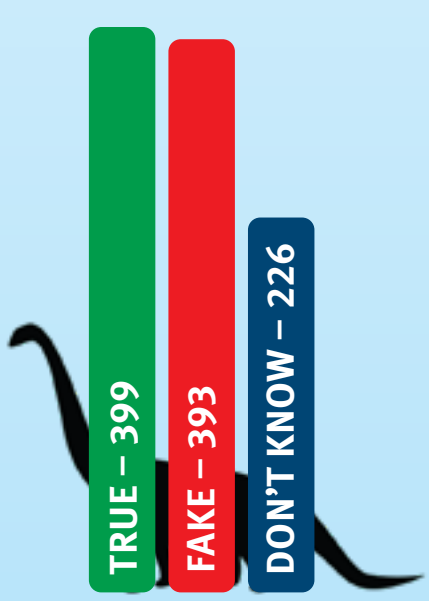

Chemtrails

Nukes

Moon Landings

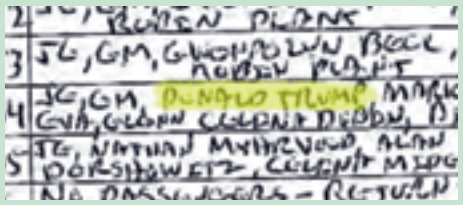

Dinosaurs

Pandas

International summary

Trump named as rapist

Trump's name on Epstein flight log

'DONALD Trump was an active participant in Jeffrey Epstein's sexual abuse of young women during the mid-to-late 1990s,' says new House Judiciary report in the U.S.

The report has a new allegation that Trump raped a 24-year-old and then promised her a visa and NYU admission, demanding she stay quiet.

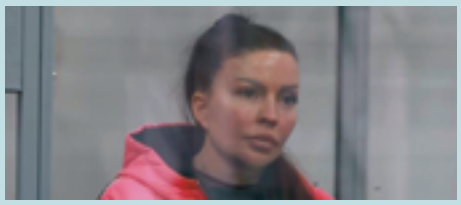

Five of the 11 women who tie Donald Trump to Epstein's sex trafficking operation have directly accused Trump of raping or sexually assaulting them in Epstein's company or direct physical presence:

- Beatrice Keul credibly alleges that Trump violently raped her at a November 1993 pageant at the Plaza Hotel in New York City and that Epstein, Trump and others used this pageant as a hunting ground to prey on vulnerable young women and girls
- Stacey Williams, who offered a detailed and corroborated account of Trump sexually assaulting her in the 1990s while she was with him and Epstein in an office at Trump Tower
- Jill Harth, who has also publicly detailed Trump aggressively pursuing and violently sexually assaulting her and another woman in 1994 at a Mar-a-Lago party where Epstein and Trump were the only men present
- Katie Johnson, who gave the FBI a detailed account of her repeated rape at the hands of Trump and Epstein in 1994 in New York City when she was a minor
- Jane Doe, who offered FBI a graphic account of Trump assaulting her when she was a minor in the mid-1980s in New York by forcibly pushing her head down to his exposed penis.

Two Epstein survivors, 'Jane' and 'Kate', told the FBI that either Epstein or Maxwell seemingly offered them up to Trump for the purposes of sex or indicated their availability.

- booksbehindborders.org
  Donald Trump was a co-conspirator in epstein's trafficking operation
  https://tinyurl.com/y6ap2pxf

Torture house in Ukraine

Hero medic Valentina Molodaya on trial

UKRAINIAN protestors uncovered and exposed a secret torture chamber run by the neo-nazi Azov Battalion, where 40 men were being held and tortured for escaping the Ukrainian regime forcibly drafting them into the war, along with a 14-year-old boy, who joined the protests against the torture chamber.

The heroic Ukrainian medic who rescued the torture victims, is now being charged by the Ukrainian regime with 'obstructing the activities of the Armed Forces of Ukraine [the Azov Battalion] and disseminating information about the locations of military units [i.e. exposing a torture chamber] through her participation in the events in Petropavlivska Borshchahivka.'

Ukrainian-Canadian academic Ivan Katchanovski documented 'Orwellian: Security Service of Ukraine arrested and charged female medic Valentina Molodaya and two others, who uncovered illegal secret prison of neo-Nazi-led Azov corps and evacuated four tortured detainees for medical treatment. They face up to eight years in prison for 'obstructing lawful activities of Ukrainian Armed Forces' and 'unauthorised dissemination of information regarding movement, displacement, or deployment of Ukrainian Armed Forces.' Court denied bail to female medic and sanctioned her arrest.'

In court, Valentina Molodaya testified that the Azov battalion was "demanding 20,000 dollars from the service members to let them out. If people refused to pay the full amount, they would start torturing them."

She described signs of torture on the victims who were rescued from the makeshift dungeon, including 'bruises from being beaten' and 'maggots in his wounds at the hospital', of a 'thin young man' rescued adding 'His back was rotting'.

- the307.substack.com
  Ukrainian Regime Imprisons Medic Who Exposed Azov Torture Chamber
  https://tinyurl.com/4c93n5rk

90 murdered in Ethiopia

Over 60 Christians massacred

THREE attacks in Ethiopia's Oromia region killed at least 90 Orthodox Christians, the country's Orthodox Church said, urging authorities to protect civilians and bring those responsible to justice.

The Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church's Holy Synod reports that 14 people were killed in Merti district on October 20 and a further 46 in Shirka district on Saturday. Both districts are in Oromia's Arsi Zone.

More than 20 people were seriously wounded and 20 homes were burned down, the church said, describing the killings as "brutal and merciless massacres."

A Christian resident of a nearby town said he travelled to Tereta Chole, the village in Shirka district where Saturday's attack took place, to attend funerals and help transport the wounded. "We counted the injured people who were loaded onto the truck," he said.

A priest based in the same nearby town said he saw wounded people arriving at the hospital near his home. Some patients were later referred to other hospitals, he said.

Both men spoke to The Associated Press by telephone on condition of anonymity because they feared for their safety.

Oromia government spokesperson Hailu Adugna blamed the Oromo Liberation Army, or OLA, for the attacks. He accused the rebels and their allies of trying to provoke ethnic and religious conflict to divert attention from military losses in northern Ethiopia. He presented no evidence in the statement to support the accusations.

Condemning the violence, the Orthodox Church said attacks against Christians had been increasing recently, and that "such actions undermine the country's values of mutual respect and peaceful coexistence".

- vppnews.substack.com
  ETHOPIA ALERT - Attacks Killed at least 60 Christians in Ethopia, Church Says https://tinyurl.com/ms23t4tc

A very Polish coup

EU/globalist puppet Donald Tusk

PRIME minister Donald Tusk does not have the votes to override the president Karol Nawrocki (pronounced Navroski) so he has sought control through the courts.

Tusk is Brussels' man, and wants Poland to adopt the euro single currency, send its gold to the European Central Bank in Frankfurt, to surrender Poland's national veto and, when ordered, to march to war against Russia.

On this latter point, European Commission (EC) president Ursula von der Leyen is trying to get more power over national governments to force through foreign policy decisions.

Countries currently have a veto but the EC wants to replace this with majority voting.

As the journal Politico notes, even some enthusiastically pro-EU member countries do not want to lose control of foreign policy.

Like many former communist satellites, Poles are not particularly fond of Russia, and tend to see its hand everywhere.

Paradoxically, they see Brussels' man, Tusk, weakening Poland internally while Russia pressures it from without. The EC's pressure on Warsaw is no different from how it restricts individual rights — the legal mechanism is the same.

Brussels flags someone as a dissenter, but it does not impose sanctions directly. Instead, the Council of the European Union, comprising government ministers from all member states, orders that an individual be banned from crossing borders or using bank accounts.

When passed, the 'restrictive measures' become EU regulations. And, as 'EU regulations', they become binding law in all member states simultaneously and automatically. They override domestic national law without requiring approval by parliament. That is the overreach which Poland is resisting. Call it an authoritarian bureaucracy or a dictatorship.

- moneycircus.substack.com
  A very Polish coup
  https://tinyurl.com/mr2cdj7z

‘Death more merciful than this life’

Israel siege edges Gaza to brink of starvation

by PALESTINE WILL BE FREE

AS the Israelis continue to weaponise food in their genocidal war against Palestinians, Gaza is facing another famine.

Bakeries in the besieged enclave have sounded the alarm over severe flour shortages, and bread queues have returned.

The head of the Bakery Owners Association in the Gaza Strip, Abdul Nasser al-Ajrami, said the area’s warehouses were now completely out of flour, warning that the seven remaining bakeries could stop operating if new supplies were not brought in.

Gaza had 20 functioning bakeries at the start of Israel’s genocidal assault.

Al-Ajrami told the Wafa news agency the crisis stems from the occupation’s closure of the crossings and its refusal to allow commercial shipments into the Strip.

He said the flour currently available in the markets comes from the World Food Programme (WFP), while commercial bakeries that rely on flour brought in through the crossings have ceased operating.

The WFP last month announced cuts to aid for 500,000 people in the Gaza Strip, due to its new director, Luke Lindberg.

It is not just flour that is in short supply; genocide survivors are also experiencing skyrocketing prices for other basic foods.

Euro-Med Human Rights Monitor’s field teams in Gaza ‘found severe shortages of vegetables, fruit, and other basic goods, while prices for what remained were beyond the reach of most residents.’

The statement continued: ‘Because of the blockade, destruction, repeated displacement, and systematic impoverishment imposed by Israel in violation of international law, people in Gaza have lost their livelihoods and exhausted their savings.

‘Depleted flour stocks and a shortage of operating fuel have forced several bakeries to close in recent days, including two major bakeries in Gaza City that have stopped operating.

‘This has brought back long, exhausting bread queues amid a sharp rise in flour prices and the prices of other basic foodstuffs. The closures deprive thousands of displaced and resident families of their main food source, particularly amid the absence of cooking gas and the difficulty of preparing food in tents and overcrowded shelters.”

Queing for bread in Gaza

First-hand accounts of Food shortages

Palestinian Umm Khalid, 43, said: “I have diabetes and need to regulate my meals and choose food suitable for my condition but food shortages and the high prices of vegetables have made that difficult.

“Our life is torture. Every day there is a problem. Sometimes the crossing is closed, sometimes there are no arrangements, and sometimes goods with no nutritional value at all are allowed in.

“Most of the time I cannot find suitable food that I can afford, and everything is outrageously expensive. I fear that if this situation continues, my health will deteriorate further, because as a person with diabetes I need regular food.”

Nasser al-Shurafa, 56, a displaced father-of-four living in Tal al-Hawa, west of Gaza City, tried three bakeries to buy bread, but all three were closed. He expects more days of starvation.

“For three years, we have been suffering and living an unbearable life, deprived of even the most basic of our human rights,” Nasser told Middle East Eye. “I believe we are going to suffer from starvation again.”

Ola Shamali and her family of nine have begun cutting back on food as breadlines start to get longer in Gaza again. She also cares for her 78-year-old father, Mohammed Shamali, who has bladder cancer, high blood pressure, and diabetes. He needs a varied and nutritious diet, but this is impossible under Israeli barbarism.

“My father is still suffering from the deteriorating health caused by last year’s famine,” Ola said.

“We are living a miserable life in tents,” she added. “And now they want to reduce the food portions entering Gaza. Death is more merciful than this life.”

Source: Euro-Med Human Rights Monitor

During the Israeli-engineered famine last year, 466 Palestinians, including 156 children, died due to malnutrition and starvation. The Gaza Health Ministry last week estimated that more than 1.4 million people (67 per cent of the population) were expected to face crisis-level food insecurity or worse to the end of 2026, while 74,200 children will require treatment for acute malnutrition by April 2027.

After engineering a crushing famine last year, the Israelis instituted ‘aid’ distribution through the allegedly criminal Gaza Humanitarian Foundation (GHF). The distribution sites operated by the GHF became killing fields for starving Palestinians.

It has been reported that more than 2,700 aid seekers were killed at these sites by Israeli and American mercenaries.

Euro-Med Human Rights Monitor described the prevalent Israeli policy of restricting humanitarian aid and commercial shipments as a ‘deliberate policy of nutritionally impoverishing the population and keeping people in constant need and uncertainty.

‘Many families have cut their daily meals to the bare minimum and turned to food alternatives that lack essential nutrients. Mothers are also finding it increasingly difficult to obtain suitable food for their children, including baby formula and prescribed nutritional supplements.’

LINKS

- palestinewillbefree.substack.com
  ‘My children have nothing to eat’: How Israel’s weaponisation of food and water is pushing Gaza deeper into hunger and poverty:
  https://tinyurl.com/2s496adx
- english.wafa.ps
  Gaza faces complete flour shortage as seven remaining bakeries risk closure within 48 hours :
  https://tinyurl.com/3yrvjt94
- palestinewillbefree.substack.com
  How the GHF became sites of killing and humiliation for Palestinian women in Gaza:
  https://tinyurl.com/5n88hn9v

Being born into genocide

by PALESTINE WILL BE FREE

Maryam suffered horrific burns in bombing that killed her mother

AT a mere two years old, Maryam Ghanem witnessed her mother being burned alive after an Israeli bomb ripped through their apartment in Gaza City.

Maryam survived the bombing with third-degree burns and psychological trauma, the extent and consequences of which cannot yet be known.

Maryam was born amid the ongoing genocide on February 18, 2024, and has known nothing but genocide. The pain of loss accompanied her even before birth, as the Israelis killed her father, Ahmad Ghanem, a month into the genocide. She arrived three months after her father was martyred in an Israeli airstrike that also killed Ahmad's brother and several members of their family.

By the time of Maryam's birth, the effects of the Israeli-engineered starvation had begun to emerge in the Gaza Strip. During the first months of her life, Maryam experienced repeated displacement as her mother, Reem Awad, moved with her between tents, schools, and hospitals in search of safe shelter.

Maryam Ghanem, two, suffered horrific burns across ger face and body. Photo: Ultra Palestine

Her mother's travails came to a fiery end on October 14.

Maryam's parents endured five years of waiting, longing, and medical interventions for their first daughter's birth. Yet Ahmad never knew Maryam, and she had the misfortune of witnessing her mother being burned to death.

Ibrahim Ghanem, Maryam's uncle, told Ultra Palestine that she "is still living in a state of panic since the air strike".

He added: "From time to time, she suddenly jolts, and if she cannot find anyone around her, she starts screaming. Whenever she hears the sound of nursing trolleys or movement outside her room at Al-Shifa Hospital, she screams, believing it is a rocket.

"Even the injections for treatment and pain relief remind her of what happened. With every prick of a needle, she screams as though the rocket is falling on her all over again."

Maryam remembers the flames and her mother being burned. She described what happened in simple language to her grandfather and grandmother, yet despite this, she does not know that her mother is gone and will not return.

"Maryam, the clever, beautiful two-and-a-half-year-old, astonished us when she recited the prayer before eating after I had persuaded her to eat," her uncle said.

"But she kept asking for her mother to come and feed her with her own hand. We stood before her, helpless, with nothing to do but cry.

"We do not know how we will remove from Maryam's mind the tragedy she witnessed," he added. "Her birth was difficult, then she lived through famine and displacement, and today she loses her mother at the beginning of her life, after being deprived of seeing her father. We do not know how we will compensate her for what she saw and experienced."

- palestinewillbefree.substack.com
  Born amid genocide, 2-year-old Maryam Ghanem watched her mother burn to death. Now, she asks for her mother:
  https://tinyurl.com/4p9rwxsu

'Philanthropists' supporting Israel

by JACQUI DEEVOY

RECENT public attention on Susan Dell, wife of Dell Technologies founder Michael Dell, has prompted renewed scrutiny of the couple's philanthropic activities and business connections to Israel.

Very few people had heard of the Dells until last month, when the couple spoke at a meeting with Donald Trump.

At the same time, I glimpsed a Facebook post which went into detail about the Dells' alleged support of IDF (Israel Defense Forces) soldiers and related Israeli causes. This was primarily through a 2014 donation and grants from the Michael and Susan Dell Foundation.

In November 2014, Michael and Susan Dell pledged $1.8m at the Friends of the Israel Defense Forces (FIDF) Western Region Gala in Beverly Hills.

Michael and Susan Dell in the spotlight

The funds were designated for educational scholarship programs for IDF soldiers and veterans. This was part of a record-raising event (around $33m in total) that also drew major donors such as Larry Ellison and Sheldon and Miriam Adelson.

Contemporary reporting (Bloomberg, Times of Israel, Hollywood Reporter, and others) confirms the joint pledge by the Dells.

Michael Dell was quoted, emphasising support for the soldiers' higher education.

FIDF is a U.S.-based non-profit organisation that raises funds for the health, well-being, education, and related support of active-duty IDF soldiers, veterans, and bereaved families. It coordinates with Israeli military and defence authorities for these non-combat welfare programs.

The couple co-founded the Michael and Susan Dell Foundation in 1999. It has an Israel-focused program emphasising education, STEM pathways, career development, and national service opportunities (which in Israel can involve military or alternative service).

Specific 2024 grants linked to IDF-related or pro-Israel support include: $1m to American Friends of Ogen (supporting the Israeli social lender Ogen), earmarked for interest-free loans to IDF reservists called to duty; other grants for raising awareness of the October 7, 2023 attack, combating antisemitism, Jewish campus support, and related initiatives.

Israeli business figures have described Michael and Susan Dell as "true friends of Israel" in the context of tech investment partnerships.

Separately, Dell Technologies, the company, is reported to have long-standing commercial contracts supplying servers, storage, and related technology to the Israeli Ministry of Defense and military.

This includes multi-hundred-million-dollar deals funded in part by the U.S. and other business ties. Those corporate relationships are distinct from the foundation and the 2014 FIDF gift.

- timesofisrael.com
  Hollywood gala raises a record $33 million for IDF
  https://tinyurl.com/mrx57rk3

Machine gunned to death

Historic refugee camp massacre is mirroring the ongoing atrocities

by HEATHER STROUD

The aftermath of the Sabra Shatila massacre, 1982. Photo: UNWRA

WHEN veteran reporter Robert Fisk first entered the Beirut Palestinian refugee camp on September 18, 1982, these are some of the words he wrote to describe what he saw.

'It was the flies that told us. There were millions of them. Big as bluebottles, they covered us, unaware at first of the difference between the living and the dead. If the smell of the dead in Sidon was nauseating, the stench in Chatila made us retch.

"The dead were everywhere – in the road, in alleyways, in backyards and broken rooms, beneath crumpled masonry and laid on top of rubbish tips.

"The murderers – Christian militiamen whom Israel had let into the camps to flush out (manufactured) terrorists – had only just left. The blood was still wet on the ground.

"When we had seen one hundred bodies we stopped counting. Down every alleyway there were corpses – women, adolescent young men, babies, children and grandparents – lying together where they had been knifed or machine gunned to death, in a lazy profusion."

Before moving on to Beirut, Israel bombed the Palestinian refugee camps of Rashidieh, in Tyre and Ain el-Hillweh, in Sidon, leaving behind death, and the destruction of the camps.

Israeli forces then moved on to Beirut and, having surrounded the Palestinian camp of Shatila, sent in extremist right-wing Christian Phalange militants to execute three days of the most brutal massacres imaginable.

It is estimated that between 3,000 and 4,000 civilians were massacred over that period. The numbers cannot accurately be documented because many Palestinians could only be registered as disappeared.

The spurious reason stated by Israel for entering Lebanon and carrying out these massacres was to eliminate the influence of the Palestinian Liberation Organisation (PLO). However, prior to the massacre, and under the direction of the U.S. and United Nations, all PLO leaders and fighters had left Lebanon.

This included all Palestinian men considered to be of fighting age. Although a promise had been made by the UN to protect the Palestinians, the UN forces had withdrawn by September which left the families vulnerable to the attack.

The only people left in the camp were women, children, babies and the aged.

Now 44 years have passed, and the survivors and families of the 1982 Sabra Shatila massacre seem further away from obtaining justice than ever before.

The commemoration, 'Never to Forget', an Italian programme initiated by the late Italian foreign corespondent Stefano Chiarini, in coordination with humanitarian activist Kassem Aina, is held during September every year in Beirut.

During these past few years the cries for justice have not lost their intensity and have merely become broader in recognition of Israel's more recent atrocities. The distant screams and explosions from bombs dropped on Gaza, South Lebanon and the Bekaa, while not audibly heard in Beirut, echoed throughout the ceremonial hall as a grim reminder that Israel, far from being held to account for its crimes, has continued to expand its brutality with impunity.

The 1982 massacre in Beirut was not the first of Israel's orchestrated mass killings and is unlikely to be the last. One could go back to Israel's birth pangs 1947/8 when Jewish militant gangs, during what is known as the Palestinian Nakba (catastrophe), massacred an estimated 15,000 Palestinian civilians and caused a further 750,000 to flee.

Having cleared the villages, they incorporated them into Israel. Many of those fled to Lebanon taking their house keys with them in hopes of one day returning.

While Palestinians remain refugees with the hope of international 'right of return', Israel's claim on the land remains tenuous.

For those who fled the Nakba, escaping to Lebanon was not far enough to keep their lives. Geographically situated next to Israel, Lebanon has suffered a series of attacks and occupation, from the massacre of Tel Zataar Refugee Camp in 1976 to the bombing of Lebanon in 2006, and to the further attacks we have seen more recently.

Fisk's description of the massacre that occurred in Sabra Shatila could be applied to the ongoing genocide the world is currently witnessing in Gaza.

His words also describe the current invasion of South Lebanon where whole villages are being reduced to rubble, killing a documented 775 women and children. This is according to Habbat al-Qulub, an independent, grassroots humanitarian initiative and digital registry dedicated to preserving the memory of children killed or wounded during the conflicts and ongoing Israeli military operations in Lebanon.

The consequences of the attacks of two years ago are still felt. The injuries remain, and the crater – where Israeli jets dropped 80 tons of explosives that killed long-serving Secretary-General of Hezbollah, Sayyed Hassan Nasrallah, along with fellow Lebanese Hezbollah resistance fighters, and neighbouring Lebanese civilians – gapes like an open wound for the world to see.

The cries of Palestinian Gazans mingle with the cries for justice with Palestinian and Lebanese victims of Israeli atrocities.

The current genocide in Gaza, the continued ethnic cleansing in the West Bank and attacks on South Lebanon, are not solely the result of action by Palestinian resistance groups on October 7.

All context has been conveniently airbrushed away, along with information as to how many Israelis were actually killed that day by Israel's own weapons.

Israel's wars are not about self-defence. Israelis are not the victims of unprovoked aggression. They are the perpetrators. The wars are about land acquisition (The Oded Yinon Plan), and promoting battle-tested military hardware on behalf of weapons manufacturers like the Israeli Elbit Systems and Palantir.

For the Messianic Evangelical Christians, these wars are about an eschatological 'end times' scenario where the world is destroyed to allow their prophesied messiah to return.

What 'He' would return to defies description. However, for the uninitiated into this cult belief doctrine, it is impossible to believe that an intelligent, all-knowing Creator, encompassing the Christian message of wisdom and love, would condone the genocide of innocents.

None of these crimes will be forgotten, and none can be forgiven without justice in front of the world like the Nuremberg trials were.

These massacres are allowed to continue because none of our Western governments, media and establishments have been prepared to hold Israel to account.

Israeli and Western leaders should take note – the voices across the world are growing louder and more focused in a collective determination to see justice.

In this call for justice, it is not only the perpetrators of these crimes that need to stand trial, but also those who, through fear or financial incentives, are complicit in enabling them.

- amazon.co.uk
  Pity the Nation: Lebanon at War
  https://bit.ly/4j54GlZ

If they don't comply, they have to go

Bolivian leader removed for refusing to bend knee to West

by MARTIN SHAW

Former Bolivian president Evo Morales. Photo: pd

A LEAKED police memo outlining a joint operation between the Bolivian police and the U.S. military to capture former president Evo Morales has caused uproar.

And, according to multiple reports, the plan included massacring any villagers who stood in their way.

The response from the people in Bolivia, was immediate and defiant. Indigenous rural communities surrounded Morales' residence to protect him. Workers seized Chimore airport near his home, blocking the runway to prevent American planes or helicopters from landing.

These were peasants, farmers, and many of them union members too.

For a month, Bolivia was paralysed by road blockades and protests, which Western media claimed was led by the former president. There were 22 blockades across the country, which began last May, with their rally cry being against soaring living costs and moves to use Bolivian land as security for massive debt.

And last month, it emerged Morales was being investigated over alleged murder, torture and rape. Do the allegations hold water? Perhaps, but looking at the political context is important.

To understand why Bolivia is burning, we must first understand what happened in 2019, because this is not a new story. This is the same story, repeating itself.

Morales, Bolivia's first indigenous president, was elected in 2006. Over nearly 14 years in office, his 'Movement Towards Socialism' reduced poverty by 42 per cent and extreme poverty by 60 per cent, halved unemployment and nearly tripled per-capita GDP.

The Washington Post said it was 'indisputable that Bolivians are healthier, wealthier, better educated, living longer and more equal than at any time in this South American nation's history.'

In October of 2019, Morales won re-election with 10 per cent more votes than his closest competitor, observed by international monitors. The U.S.-funded Organisation of American States, which was established during the Cold War to prevent the spread of leftist governments in Latin America, then issued a statement expressing 'deep concern and surprise' at the results without producing a single piece of evidence of fraud.

The Centre for Economic and Policy Research conducted a comprehensive statistical analysis and found no evidence of fraud. But the OAS had already dutifully fulfilled its purpose: cast doubt on a legitimate election and provide diplomatic cover for what came next.

And that was a military coup. The Bolivian army forced Morales to resign on November 10, 2019. Right-wing politician Jeanine Anez declared herself interim president, and Donald Trump immediately recognised her illegitimate claim.

At least 32 protestors were killed and hundreds injured in the weeks that followed. Morales fled to Mexico.

But why does the U.S. care so much about Bolivia anyway? One word: lithium.

Bolivia sits on approximately 70 per cent of the world's supply, the mineral essential for electric car batteries, electronic devices, and weapons systems.

In the months before the 2019 coup, Bolivia had concluded a $2.3bn deal with a Chinese consortium to mine its lithium reserves.

U.S. and Canadian companies had sought to make a lithium agreement with Bolivia, but could not meet Morales' conditions – he insisted on terms that would benefit the Bolivian people rather than foreign corporations.

As analyst Vijay Prashad put it at the time: "The idea there might be a new social contract for the lithium was unacceptable to the main transnational mining companies. Morales himself was a direct impediment to the takeover of the lithium fields by the non-Chinese transnational firms. He had to go."

He had to go.

That is the logic of Empire – a democratically elected leader must be removed because he stands in the way of corporate profits.

But the communities defending Morales are not passive bystanders. Among the most visible are the Ponchos Rojos, an Aymara indigenous group from the highlands of La Paz. They are radical activists who traditionally wear red ponchos, carry ancient weapons as symbols of resistance, and maintain a military-style organisation rooted in centuries of anti-colonial struggle.

The government accuses them of fomenting civil war. But the other framing is the more honest one: the Ponchos Rojos are defending their communities, their lands, and their leader against a U.S.-backed campaign of state terror.

Eight Latin American governments issued a joint statement rejecting 'any action aimed at destabilising the democratic order' falling short of naming the U.S. nor condemning the leaked document revealing the planned kidnapping.

So that's where we're at. The people of Bolivia are fighting for their lives, for their leader, and against an empire that has never accepted their right to exist on their own terms.

They seized an airport with their bare hands to stop an American kidnapping. Tens of thousands walked for six days through the highlands to reach the capital.

- www.npr.org
  Bolivia's capital under siege as protests deepen crisis for President Paz https://tinyurl.com/bfuz58xz
- theguardian.com
  Bolivia investigates ex-president Evo Morales over alleged ties to 2009 killings https://tinyurl.com/ycsbnpwp

Resisting the end of copper landlines

by GLORIA MOSS

ON Wednesday, October 14, a jury of twelve at a Common Law court in London found five defendants guilty of reckless endangerment of the population through their complicity in the scrapping of copper-wired telephone lines.

The five were the CEOs of the BT Group and OpenReach; the Chair of Ofcom; and the past and present Secretaries of State for Digital, Culture, Media and Sport.

Three witnesses, Piers Corbyn, Simone Plaut and Oriana Perdoni presented a powerful case for the harms caused and the jury reached a unanimous verdict in record time. What swayed them to act so decisively?

Corbyn outlined the multiple breaches of statute alongside the risks to national security, and the ability of all members of the population to access digital communications after the switch from copper wires; Plaut spoke of the failure of the defendants to conduct an adequate risk assessment with failures to identify and evaluate relevant safety, exposure and privacy risks, as well as investigate foreseeable harm, all amounting to reckless endangerment.

Copper: Our most valuable metal?

Perdoni cited a situation where a hundred-year old mother-in-law tries to contact her son-in-law at night and is unable to, since their digital-only service is switched off as her husband had metal implants that the International Commission on Non-Ionising Radiation Protection (ICNIRP) guidelines describe as leading to adverse health outcomes in the presence of digital signals.

Further context to the endangerment was made clear: the replacement system proposed, 'Voice over Internet Protocol' (VOIP) would not survive an energy outage, cyber-attack or war, thereby representing a direct danger to life. It will also require the modem to be kept on 24/7 for round the clock access, an energy usurper and a detriment to the environment. Battery back-ups are only temporary (a few hours at most) and are not an option for those suffering from the functional impairment Electrohypersensitivity (EHS).

The negative picture was compounded by the fact that the BT subsidiary OpenReach has already recovered over 22,000 metric tons of copper since 2023, receiving £99m up front for it. Ultimately, the copper extracted and sold could raise around £2.7bn. You might ask where the extracted copper is going? An extremely likely contender is data centres, since copper plays a pivotal role in the infrastructure for handling the massive data volumes needed for cloud computing, AI, total surveillance and the Internet of Things (IoT).

At no point have the British public been consulted and, in fact, a petition amassing 115,000 signatures against the scrapping of copper-wired landlines, presented to Downing Street in June 2026, has yet to receive a government response.

The jury's unanimous guilty verdict included demands that the copper sold be returned to the people; that a public consultation be held; phone boxes reinstalled for the sake of national security; and copper wires reinstated where they have been dismantled.

The verdict also included a demand that the defendants, all found guilty of malfeasance/misfeasance in public office (MIPO) for failing to protect the public, be removed from office.

- You can read the case for the lawful and legal nature of a People's Court here: https://tinyurl.com/49xrat4e

True Pearls: Chellis Glendinning (1947-)

by RICHARD HOUSE

U.S. psychologist, mass-tech critic, and author of psychology manifesto, When Technology Wounds

ALL technologies are political. They are entities that have been consciously structured to reflect and serve specific powerful interests in specific historical situations. They tend to create rigid social systems and institutions that people do not understand and cannot change or control.

Corporations entice a populace made lonely and scared by life in mass society into believing that they cannot survive without a gadget that a year before they could not imagine.

If we cannot envision the world we would like to live in, we cannot work towards its creation. If we cannot place ourselves in it in our imagination, we will not believe it is possible.

Neo-Luddites are not anti-technology. What we oppose are the kinds of technologies that are, at root, destructive of human lives and communities.

Chellis Glendinning

Neo-Luddites have the courage to gaze at the full catastrophe of our century: the technologies created and disseminated by modern Western societies are out of control and desecrating the fragile fabric of life on Earth.

Like the early Luddites, we are a desperate people seeking to protect the livelihoods, communities, and families we love, which lie on the verge of destruction.

Technology consists of more than machines. In essence, a technology reflects a worldview.

The view that lies at the foundation of modern technological society encourages a mechanistic approach to life: to rational thinking, efficiency, utilitarianism, scientific detachment, and the belief that the human place in nature is one of ownership and supremacy.

We reject technologies that emanate from a worldview that sees rationality as the key to human potential, material acquisition as the key to human fulfillment, and technological development as the key to social progress.

We favour the creation of technologies by the people directly involved in their use – not by scientists, engineers, and entrepreneurs who gain financially from mass production and distribution of their inventions and who know little about the context in which their technologies are used.

We favour the creation of technologies built with a high degree of flexibility so that they do not impose a rigid and irreversible imprint on their users, and we favour the creation of technologies that foster independence from technological addiction and promise political freedom, economic justice, and ecological balance.

Stopping the destruction brought by [modern] technologies requires not just regulating or eliminating individual items like pesticides or nuclear weapons. It requires new ways of thinking about humanity and new ways of relating to life. It requires the creation of a new worldview.

Thinking in a systemic way is hard to do. The English language is structured for commercial transaction in the service of societal expansion – with a subject acting upon an object; its structure and vocabulary don't convey the complexities of inter-relations among multiple forces and events. Or a concept of the whole of things.

People tend to personalise technology so they can't get to the systemic analysis. They say, 'Oh, I can't give up my personal computer' or 'I just love radio too much'.

In the holistic health movement, we learned to think about the human body and its relationship to the world as a whole, not merely as the expression of the mind/body or human/nature split that dominates allopathic medicine.

Let's resuscitate the technology question. With genetically-modified everything, supercomputers and wireless communications, peak oil, ongoing wars, collapsing economies etc., it's needed now more than ever.

The Light

LONDON, MAY 14, 1943 — The Uncensored Truth — A FREE Truthpaper — Spring edition

The Katyn massacre: The Truth

by John Hamer

Nazi Germany and the Soviet Union each invaded Poland in September of 1939, having divided the country into separate spheres of influence under the Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact.

The Red Army arrested and imprisoned thousands of Polish military officers, policemen, and intelligentsia during their occupation of eastern Poland and prisoners of war and civilian internees captured by the Soviets were placed in several camps in the western USSR, run by the People's Commissariat for Internal Affairs, or NKVD.

In April this year, in the Katyn Forest near Smolensk in the Soviet Union, occupying German troops discovered eight large graves containing the remains of thousands of the Polish Army officers and intellectual leaders who had been interned at the prisoner-of-war camp at Kozielsk. Bodies of the prisoners who had been housed at Ostashkov and Starobielsk were discovered near Piatykhatky and Mednoye, respectively.

Collectively, these murders have become known as the Katyn Forest Massacre. The Polish war leader and British ally Wladyslaw Sikorski had become a real threat to Stalin and therefore the British/Soviet relationship after he discovered that the KGB had cold-bloodedly massacred around 20,000 Polish officers in the Katyn Forest. This is the infamous 'Katyn Massacre' which has hitherto been blamed on Germany by the allied powers. The killings were an extension of the Soviet state's 'Great Purge' of the 1930s, political murders which often targeted citizens of Polish heritage. Stalin had never forgiven Poland for defeating his own forces in the Polish-Soviet war of 1920.

Mass grave of Polish officers in Katyn Forest, exhumed by Germany in 1943

Many, many other crimes and atrocities are currently being committed by the Soviet Bolsheviks under the explicit orders of their leader, Josef Stalin. But of course, as allies in the cause of the future New World Order, the Soviets are never even accused of so-called 'war crimes.' And please do not make the mistake of blaming the 'Russians' in general, for the actions of the Bolsheviks, many millions of innocent Russians are suffering greatly and being murdered to at the hands of these barbarians. In fact, the famous Russian author and dissident, Alexandr Solzhenitsyn estimated that the Bolsheviks have murdered tens of millions Russians during the quarter century since the 1917 revolution. A barbaric crime which is still continuing to this day, at the time of writing.

On April 13, 1943, Germany announced the discovery of mass graves in the Katyn forest near Smolensk, Russia. The bodies of several thousand men, whose hands had been bound and who had been shot from behind, were found buried there and many more thousands were slaughtered elsewhere, the dead being mostly Polish officers. The Germans realised that the Soviet Union was responsible for the massacre and attempted to use this knowledge to their advantage. They hoped that the revelation would alienate the USSR from its allies, Great Britain, the United States and Poland.

In 1940, many Polish officers were reservists who had been the core of the country's professional middle class. The Katyn massacres wiped out around 40 per cent of Poland's doctors, as well as lawyers, engineers, teachers and journalists. And it could be argued that if this genocide was part of Stalin's strategy to cripple Poland's independence, it was highly effective.

In May 1940 though, Stalin halted the killing spree; possibly because he suspected that he had made a big mistake. Hitler was about to invade France, and when that goal was accomplished, Stalin perhaps sensed that his erstwhile ally would turn his eyes towards the Soviets. Then, once Germany invaded the Soviet Union, Stalin would need the help of the western Allies who might regard the slaughter of the Poles as an obstacle to an alliance. Britain had, after all, declared war on Germany because of a commitment to protect Poland.

It was time, therefore, for the Soviets' Katyn cover-up to begin. When the news broke about the German discovery, the Polish government-in-exile in England, asked the International Red Cross to conduct an independent investigation. Red Cross findings later indicated that the Soviets were responsible for the massacre. But the Soviets denied culpability and blamed the killings on German forces that had overrun the region in 1941, and subsequently broke diplomatic relations with the Polish government.

The April 19, 1943, edition of Pravda, the official newspaper of the Communist Party, accused the Polish government of striking a treacherous blow against the USSR. The Soviets also organised their own 'investigation' of the tragedy and determined that the fault lay with Germany, but Katyn residents knew differently.

"The stench was bad. When we came, the Germans were removing a layer of earth about a metre thick and then there were coats, bodies and coats, lying there in a row. And they were feeling these bodies, checking the pockets, removing flasks, removing watches, and the Germans wanted witnesses. They wanted us to act as witnesses for history." Dmitry Khudykh, Katyn resident

Neither the British nor the American governments wished to know too much about the mass-graves.

If their ally, the Soviet Dictator, Josef Stalin, had ordered the murders, they preferred to keep it as quiet as possible. Churchill recently addressed the issue in a confidential note, stating that: '…there is no use prowling morbidly round the three year old graves of Smolensk.'

Then earlier this year, as the Red Army began to recapture territory in eastern Poland, the Soviet secret police, the NKVD, cordoned off the Katyn forest to enable them to create one of the most elaborate cover-ups of the war, so far.

After exhuming the bodies from the graves that the Germans had previously uncovered, the NKVD had documents forged to suggest that the Germans had committed the crime. They planted the false documents on the newly-exhumed bodies and coerced local people who had witnessed the Soviet crimes to change their stories.

It has been suggested that Stalin wanted as many of the Polish Catholic intelligentsia as possible eliminated at Katyn, as almost all senior Soviets are of a certain other faith and detest Christianity.

- falsificationofhistory.co.uk

Letters to TheLIGHT

Love us or hate us, we are helping raise the level of debate in this country and across the world, so we welcome views from all perspectives, because the enemies of free thought and free speech are censorship and group-think. We are all individuals – let's have your thoughts! Please email: letters@thelightpaper.co.uk

Dear The Light,

I WANT to tell you what a wonderful breath of fresh air Clive Menzies' article – The quiet revolution – was for me.

I love The Light paper but it can feel a bit negative sometimes. Yes I know the story is a bit doom and gloom at the moment but give us something exciting and positive when you can. Alex Klaushofer's 'Stop complaining and start believing' was good too – let's get positive about the future when we can.

Bless you all and keep up the good work. Thank you with love,

Tim

Dear The Light

WAY back in 1964, legendary political theorist Herbert Marcuse wrote: 'The advancing one-dimensional society alters the relationship between the rational and the irrational.'

He later quoted Walter Benjamin: 'It is only for the sake of those without hope that hope is given to us.' I suggest Pandora's Box has been open long enough.

Herbert Marcuse: (1964) One-Dimensional Man: Studies in the Ideology of Advanced Industrial Society, Beacon Press Boston

Peter Manley

Dear The Light,

THANK you for Issue 74 of The Light, a paper I have loyally supported and promoted for about five years, currently buying 100 per month, mostly out of my own pocket, to distribute in three local towns and one village.

Another excellent number, except for the centre spread! I read it before handing it out, with increasing incredulity and dismay.

Firstly, however scientific the info re: foods may be, this presentation was totally irresponsible, because many people rely on The Light for defining advice. Almost every food group was damned, the typical reaction will be great confusion, as in my two Stand in the Park groups, with some asking: "Well, what ARE we supposed to eat, then?"

Secondly, under 'Grains', your writer disappointingly employed that lowest of MSM journalistic tricks for cheap laughs – church-bashing.

For a responsible paper which claims to hold to the moral high ground, promoting 'truth', respect and kindness, this was disgusting.

Try substituting 'Muslims' or 'Buddhists' for Seventh-day Adventists, in that paragraph to see what I mean.

The most egregious of deceits are when lies are presented in a sandwich of truth. Do you actually know any real Seventh-day Adventists? Or have you had a bad experience with an SDA which has warped your view of the whole group? That would be illogical.

When I read this section, I considered binning the entire 100 papers. How could I give out to friends and to the public, a lying account, which slandered the faith I hold dear? By the way, I am the only Adventist in my two groups.

But I thought, to be morally fair, I should not throw the baby out with the dirty bathwater. So I wrote in large letters across every centre spread, the word 'Misleading!' and across the paragraph about SDAs, I wrote the word, 'Lies'.

Most Seventh-day Adventists are a friendly, happy, helpful, healthy bunch, dedicated, as The Light readers are, to an alternative lifestyle, and many are aware, because of our unique beliefs, of the deep state activities increasing by the day.

We call them 'signs of the times'. Quite a few SDAs, like me, are awake – they read and support The Light and will be very hurt at your salacious remarks.

April Dunmett

Editor's response: We apologise for any offence caused and always take on board what our readers say, both the good and bad.

Centre pages of The Light issue 74

Dear The Light,

I WAS disappointed that your article in issue 73 (middle pages) on the Rosicrucians did not reflect deeper research, more discernment is needed.

It is important to distinguish between the teachings themselves and the manipulation of those teachings. A tradition's principles are one thing; what individuals or groups do in its name is another.

Moreover, in more recent decades, many older writings and books have been rewritten, and in the process some were distorted, so that they no longer reflect the original texts. Those who want to know what these traditions truly taught should look to the original sources.

Rosicrucian thought has drawn on Christian mysticism, Hermetic philosophy, and other spiritual traditions. Its studies on many sources in search of truth, philosophy of wisdom, the study of nature and the self, and the cultivation of virtue in everyday life. The Rosicrucians/ Theosophists/Gnostics I know are ordinary people who study, meditate and try to live with more compassion, honesty, and self-knowledge.

Of course, as in life itself, some individuals may have drifted from these ideals or misused them for bad ends. That has always been true of every religion and it says nothing about the tradition as a whole.

Sally Bell

Dear The Light,

MY wife and I were on a few days' break in Wales recently, and visited the Aberfan monument and graveyard, site of the Aberfan disaster on 21 October, 1966.

A catastrophic coal waste tip collapse sent a massive wave of black slurry into the Welsh village of Aberfan, killing 144 people.

Tip Number 7, a towering pile of colliery spoil built on a mountain slope above the village and over a natural spring, liquefied following weeks of heavy rain. A 40-foot-high wave of slurry crashed down at high speed, completely engulfing Pantglas Junior School and a row of houses. 116 children and 28 adults lost their lives in the disaster. It is an extremely moving experience to see the rows and rows of graves of children, all 8 to 11 years of age, as well as those of the adults.

October was 60 years since the disaster. Maybe this tragedy ought to be recognised nationally by the media?

Edward Mitchell

HIVE RESONANCE
MUSIC, POURED THROUGH THE HONEYCOMB.
Healing through honey charged acoustics
HIVE ORACLE APP
hiveresonance.gumroad.com

SAPIEN
MEDICINE
MUSIC & SOUND HEALING
Make space for stillness.
Immersive soundscapes for meditation, relaxation and moments of reflection.
Discover your next listening ritual.
LISTEN ON
YouTube • Spotify
Amazon Music • Apple Music
Search Sapien Medicine

T.I.M.
THE IRISH MUSKETEERS
VINCENT LAWLER
A CORK IN A STORM
A Hippies Search for Truth
VINCENT LAWLER
The second part of the exciting adventure that takes you across many lands is now available from the Amazon link below...
https://bit.ly/4z6PA5j

FOR SALE
Shepherd's Hut/Studio
Brand New Bespoke Garden Room
Beautifully Handmade in Suffolk to a very high specification.
• High-Quality Build: Clad in durable, Premium Douglas Fir timber with a fully insulated interior, high-quality flooring, ambient colour-changing LED lighting, and full electrics installed.
• Mobile Design: Built on its own trailer chassis, making it ideal for Permitted Development in domestic gardens without standard structural planning.
• Delivery: Ready to ship UK-wide.
www.chestnutpods.com/shepherdshutstudio
info@chestnutpods.com Tel: 07740078582

fforestfields.co.uk

We invite you to Fforest Fields, a haven for those who want to reconnect with the land, nature, quietness and each other. Camp under the stars, swim in the lake & roam the ancient hills. Come & escape the noise.

Pitches, Yurts , Cottage & Lodge

20% OFF: USE CODE AWAKE20

fforest fields

SanoVision® THE SECRET OF HEALTH

Pulsed Electromagnetic Field Therapy for Whole-Body Wellbeing

SANO HomeQure® PEMF

A powerful, easy-to-use PEMF system to support your natural energy, relaxation, recovery and overall wellbeing – in the comfort of your own home.

Solfeggio Programme 174 to 963 Hz

Pain Relief
Reduced Inflammation
Tissue Repair
Healing
Sleep Quality
Cellular Energy

Prices start from £2999 for HomeQure Control Unit + Body Mat

Sole UK Distributor SANO HomeQure® PEMF

Read our Testimonials online at www.theroseclinic.co.uk

Sano HomeQure is intended for general wellness and relaxation. It is not intended to diagnose, treat, cure or prevent disease and is not a substitute for professional medical care.

Chlorine Dioxide Solution (CDS)

- Strength: ~ 3000ppm
- Made in the UK
- Free shipping around the UK
- Glass or PET bottles
- Bundles available
- Starting at £10.99

Buy online at buycds.co.uk and campingstuff.uk

The Trust Works

All Rights Reserved in Trust Under God

Protect Everything You've Worked Hard to Build.

Settle Your Property into Your Own Private Trust. Own Nothing. Control Everything.

What You Do Not Own, Can Not be Taken Away from You.

www.thetrustworks.co.uk

Bespoke Trust and Will Writing Service

ARMY SURPLUS DEPOT

Unit 5, Durham Way, Heathpark Ind. Estate, Honiton EX14 1SQ.

MILITARY ISSUE KIT AND CLOTHING - INCLUDING COMBAT BOOTS, TROUSERS AND JACKETS; GORE-TEX WATER PROOFS; HEAVYWEIGHT TARPAULINS; ROUGH CAMPING/BUG OUT KIT; OVERALLS; CADET KIT; VETERANS BADGES AND BERETS.

Tue: 10.30am - 4.30pm Wed-Fri: 9.30am - 3.30pm Sat: 9.30am - 1.00pm

0140443612

www.armysurplushoniton.co.uk

HAPPY TUMMY CHARCOAL CAPSULES

The best natural food supplement for settling your tummy. They adsorb toxins, ease gas, bloat and calm acidity. Happy Tummy supports gut health and are suitable for vegetarians and vegans. They come in packs of 100 and 500 capsules, and are manufactured in the UK to AIB and GMP standards.

www.finefettlefeed.com

Tel: 0800 612 7496

Covid CBDCs
Climate Crisis
USA Crisis
Great Reset
5G UN-WEF etc

We trawl the web so you don't have to

https://www.freecitizen.uk/

Free Citizen UK

FOR SALE

Suit Cash Buyer

Newly custom built
Small detached house
3 en-suite bedrooms

NOT REGISTERED

Situated in a quite residential area of Shrewsbury, close to amenities
Suitable to those who want to remain outside the system of registration - (theft)

Recommended reading:
Stolen Land Stolen Lives and the great Con trick of DEBT by Shirley Anne Hardy

Apply by email: alexanderandco@protonmail.com

RECONNECT WITH BALANCE, CLARITY AND WELLBEING

Gentle energy healing for people and animals.

Release the impact of trauma, emotional stress, limiting patterns and unwanted attachments in a calm, supportive environment.

In person in the Cotswolds
Worldwide by video or telephone

Full Spectrum Healing

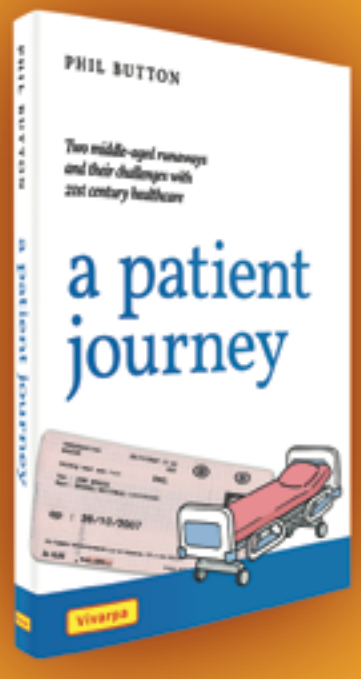

Begin your healing journey today

Sally 07971 922254 sally@fullspectrumhealing.co.uk

a patient journey

by

PHIL BUTTON

We all have stories about healthcare in 'Broken Britain'.

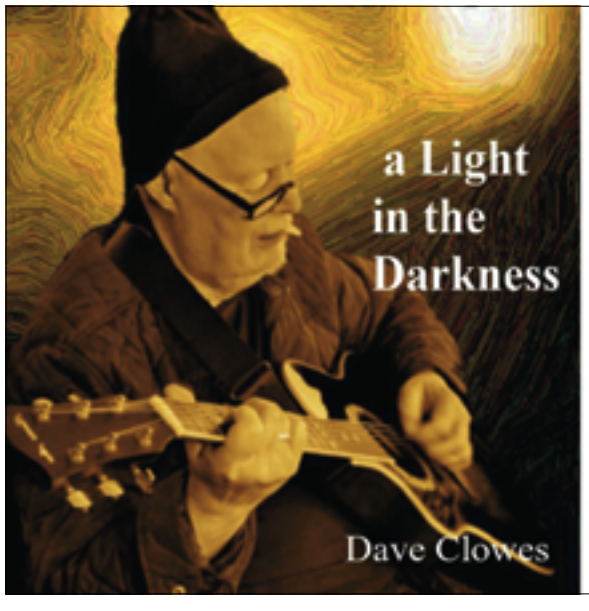

One couple had hundreds.

And hoped others would benefit from what they learnt.

A true story, now available on Amazon

https://amzn.eu/d/07kO2C9X

'Healthcare shouldn't be like this'

An eclectic album celebrating the journey through life and cancer

All proceeds go to the Beatson Cancer Charity

www.davidjohnmccarthy.com

POSSESSION BY SPIRITS
HAPPENS MORE THAN YOU THINK

Spirit & Entity Removal
Exorcism • House Clearing & Healing

'David RESCUED me from a very DARK PLACE'

Hi, I'm David, and I work REMOTELY, detecting what is going on in and around you and your home, and swiftly transmuting all the negativity I find.
Are you ready to shift the heavy energies holding you back?

"A Pharmacist that saw the Light"
info@davidjohnmccarthy.com

SAVE your ENERGY Ltd

Boiler service, breakdown, replacement and repairs

by qualified and registered engineers covering the Hertfordshire and North west London.

Up to 12 years warranty on certain boilers

All central heating and underfloor heating work undertaken

All general plumbing work undertaken

Quote Light5 when booking in for discounted Hourly Rate /Boiler service

07885556007

Gas safe 520291 • CIPHE

Which trusted traders • Herts trading standards • Checkatrade
Accredited by all leading boiler manufacturers

Make your 2027 great!

Order your calendar now

£9.95 + postage. Limited print

https://tinyurl.com/3tce4zve

GRANDER WATER REVITALISATION

A Quality Water Solution for the Whole Family

"When we drink Grander Water, it is as if we are refreshing ourselves from a pure mountain spring"

Water & Family Health

Water loses its natural energetic potential when treated with chemicals and pumped through pipes over long distances, causing water to becomes damaged, stagnant less vital and flat to the taste, loosing its natural health giving properties.

- Choose to have a vibrant healthy water flowing from every tap in your home
- The taste and quality of bottled water straight from your tap
- Scientifically proven to reduce scale, increase microbiological stability and save on heating costs

Table top systems from £225 & £1,161 for single tap systems to standard house systems with up to three baths prices from £3,980

WATER IS OUR STRENGTH

GRANDER WATER

Sales Office t: 0333 390 9479
e: waterinfo@granderwater.co.uk

www.granderwater.co.uk

Walk your way through

Winter

Clive de Carle

To keep you healthy and happy during the colder months,we would like to treat you to...

15% OFF OUR TOP 4 immune boosting supplements

Use code: Wellforwinter15

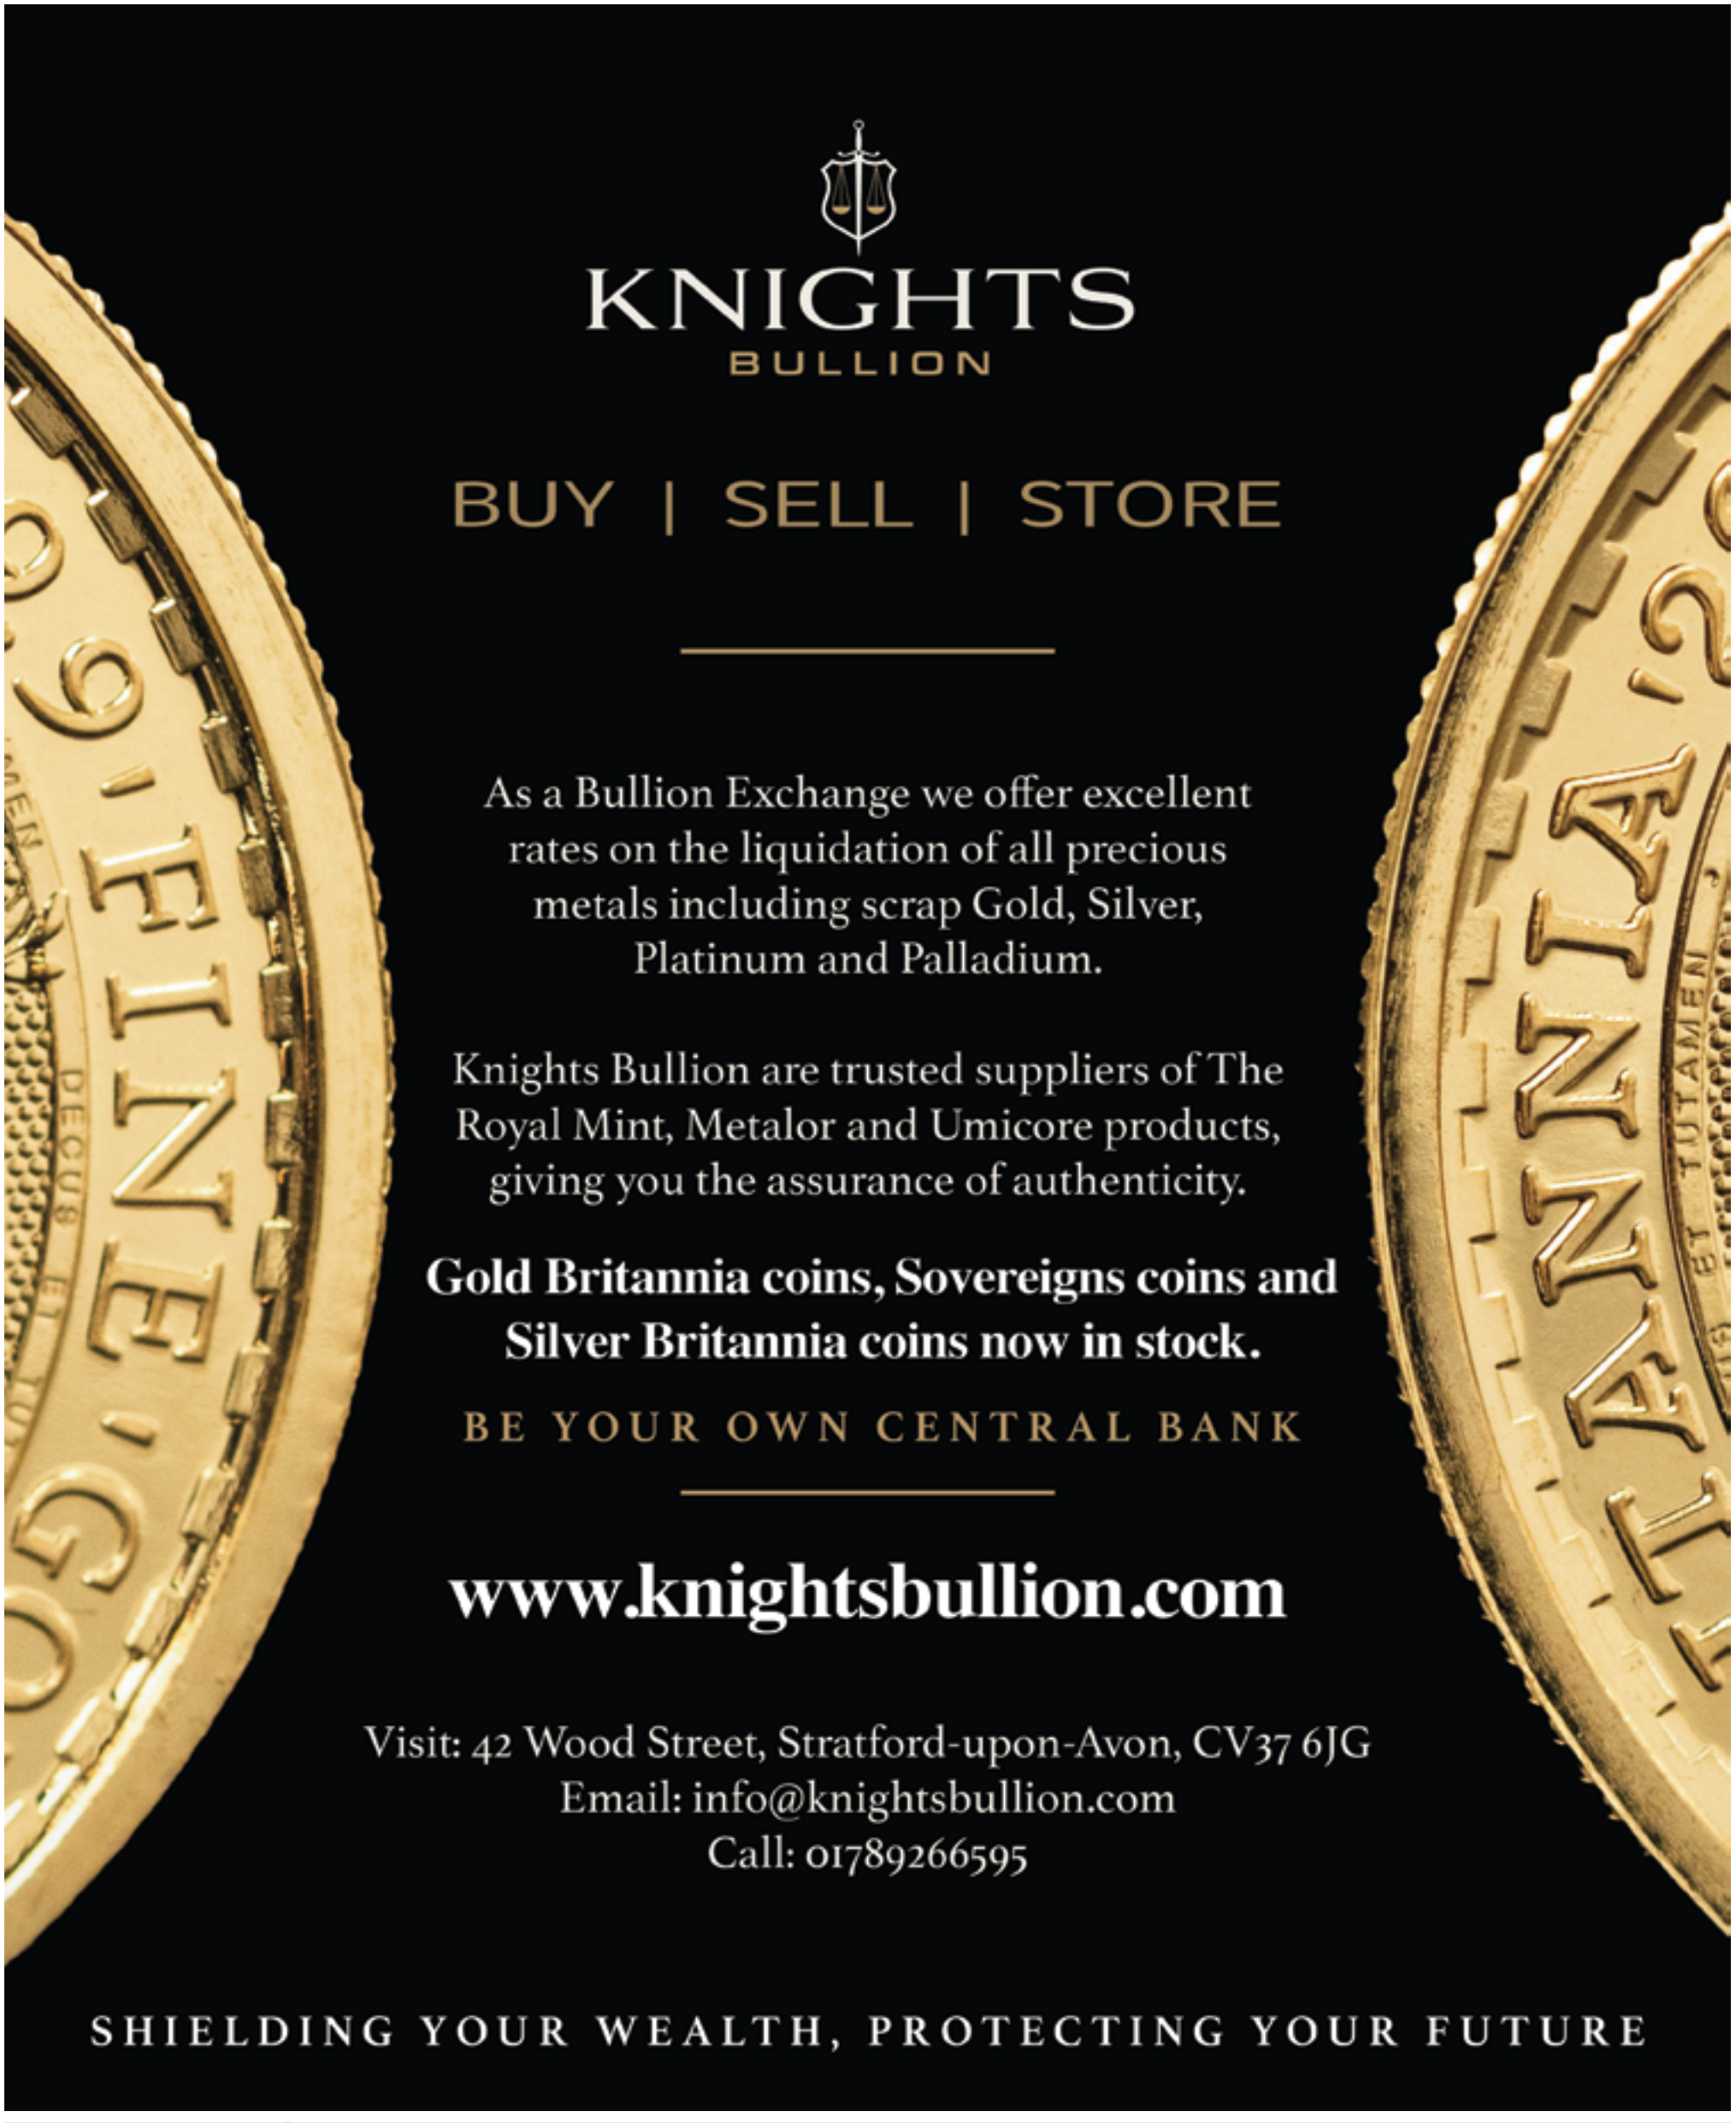

Vitamin C
Vitamin D3
Zinc Blend
Immuno

Need any human advice?

Clive's Angels are always happy to help.

email: info@clivedecarle.com
www.clivedecarle.com

ClearAIR.fm
THE SOUND OF FREEDOM
Online radio station challenging mainstream narratives and supporting independent music